Islam and Communism

INSTITUTE FOR THE STUDY OF THE USSR

Edited by JAAN PENNAR

The Institute for the Study of the USSR is a body of emigre scholars from the Soviet Union whose aim is to furnish reliable information regarding conditions and trends in the Soviet Union today. The head-quarters of the Institute, which was founded in 1950, are in Munich, Germany. Its studies embrace the general field of the social sciences, including various aspects of economics, law, government and Party, history, education, religion, literature, and social organization. The authors of all books published under the auspices of the Institute assume responsibility for statements of fact and expressions of opinion. It is the sole responsibility of the Institute to determine that these facts and opinions are worthy of presentation to the public.

Verantwortlich für den Inhalt: JAAN PENNAR

Herausgeber und Verlag: Institut zur Erforschung der UdSSR e.V., München 22, Mannhardtstrasse 6 Telefon 22 06 81-84 — Printed in Germany by Carl Gerber Grafische Betriebe KG, München 5, Angertorstr. 2

Islam and Communism

A Conference Sponsored by the

INSTITUTE FOR THE STUDY OF THE USSR

at the

Carnegie International Center

New York City

June 25, 1960

Foreword

The present volume is a collection of essays based on the reports presented at a conference on Islam and Communism on June 25, 1960. The conference was sponsored by the Institute for the Study of the USSR, with headquarters in Munich, Germany. The essays included in this volume do not necessarily follow, verbatim, the oral presentation of the original reports. The authors were given the opportunity of expanding their reports or of making such editorial changes as they subsequently deemed necessary.

The morning session was chaired by Professor Tibor Halaši-Kun of Columbia University and the afternoon session by Professor Farhat Ziadeh of Princeton University. The conference was organized for the purpose of determining what interactions, if any, exist between Islam, communism, the Soviet Union, and the Arab world. The morning session was largely devoted to a discussion of the fate of Islam in Tsarist Russia and the USSR, and the afternoon session was devoted mainly to Soviet policy in the Middle East and communism in the Arab world. Responsibility for the contents of each presentation rests strictly with the author.

The Institute hopes that by publishing these essays it will bring to those interested in the subject, as well as to the lay reader, a better understanding not only of the forces that shape the policies and actions of the Soviet Union toward Islam, but also of the currents and counter-currents generated by communism in the Middle East.

The assistance of Mr. Will Klump and others both in organizing the conference and in subsequent editorial work is gratefully acknowledged.

New York, October 1960

JAAN PENNAR
Counselor on Institute Relations

Table of Contents

THE MORNING SESSION

Notes on Participants	Summary of the Discussion	Some Preliminary Observations on the Beginnings of Communism in the Arab East	Communism and the Arab World	Soviet Policy Towards the Middle East	THE AFTERNOON SESSION	ummary of the Discussion	ents in Soviet Eastern Republics	Start Pipes	he Historical Impact of Islam in the Soviet Union Richard Frye
72	70	46	38	30		26	19	11	7.

THE MORNING SESSION

The Historical Impact of Islam in the Soviet Union Richard Frye

In order to understand the position of Muslims in the Soviet Union lay, one should recall the historical circumstances which led to the ead of Islam in vast areas of what is today the territory of the SR. A better understanding of Islam at the time of the Revolution d at the present will result from a survey of the past.

At the time the Kievan state was being formed in the tenth century D., Islam had already established a foothold among the Volga Igars. This probably basic Uralic people, as we know from the mous embassy of Ibn Fadlan from Baghdad in 922, had already idergone Turkification and was in the process of Islamization at that me. These two concepts, I believe, are key words for understanding lam in the Soviet Union.

It is significant that Islam came to the Volga area from Central sia, which had been conquered by the Arabs in the eighth century, it which had maintained earlier forms of mores and society into the lamic period of its history. Just as Sogdian merchants from Samarand helped the spread of Islam in East Turkistan, so Khorezmian erchants brought Islam to the Volga. That the axis of trade was om northwest to southeast, rather than north-south over the Causus Mountains, we gather from many sources including a revealing mark by Yaqut, a thirteenth century geographer, that a certain fuslim merchant who lived in Merv had warehouses on the Volga and in Gujarat, India. The Christian nations of the Georgians and rmenians, and the Khazars, whose aristocracy had been converted Judaism, also blocked contact between the Volga and the Caliphate Baghdad, thus isolating the Bulgars.

Khorezm was a center of Hanefite orthodoxy, hence it was no conder that the Hanefite rites prevailed among the Bulgars of the olga and indeed elsewhere in Russia down to the present. Because the existence of the "orthodox" Sunni Samanid state in Transoxiana the tenth century the steppes escaped the extensive Shiite mission-ry propaganda of that time, and instead the missionaries to the urkish tribes were usually Hanefite preachers. It is significant to member that the term for a Muslim which we find in the early Russian chronicles is Busurman or Beserman. This is the form of word "Musulman," which the Russians heard from Khorezmians way of the Volga Bulgars. Indeed, the word Beserman came to mlater a person from Khiva or Bukhara.

Because of the early implanting of orthodoxy among the Va Bulgars (later called Tatars), and because of the isolation from centers of Islam to the south, Islam in Russia remained stron orthodox and Kazan became the center of the religion. Of cot Central Asia, with its flourishing cities of Samarqand, Bukhara, others, remained in contact with the rest of the Islamic world, Central Asia too was in a sense cut off by repeated invasions from steppes, and as a great center of Muslim culture it suffered greatentury which, in a sense, marks the beginning of the modern histe of Islam.

As a result of the Mongol conquest, Turkish tribes moved acr south Russia, into Anatolia and elsewhere into the Islamic wo Turkish rulers dominated the scene almost down until the First Wo War. It became a commonplace in the Near East that the imperi belonged to the Turks, magisterium to the Persians, and sacredoti to the Arabs.

In Russia the Khanate of Kazan became a conservative center Islam where Arabic was cultivated as a sacred language. In the Crim and South Russia the Turkish peoples came under the cultural dornation (as well as political for a time) of the powerful Otton Empire. In Central Asia, however, constant warfare between the scendants of Chaghatay, then of Timur, was ended only by the expasion of the Uzbeks at the beginning of the sixteenth century. By the time the streets of the great cities were sprouting weeds, and strong Shiite state of Safavid Persia had imposed a block between Central Asia and the Arab world. In Azerbaidzhan, Shiite and Persia influences were predominant.

One may recapitulate the situation of Islam in the territory of thris USSR to the nineteenth century somewhat as follows: The Crime rat Tatars looked south across the Black Sea for their contacts and into spiration with little if any contact with other Muslims in the empir th of the Tsars, except later with the Tatars of Kazan. The Azerbaidzh hid Muslims were closely tied to Persia in religion and in culture, thus once cut off from other Turkish peoples. In Central Asia the Uzbeks haar split into a host of quarreling Khanates which had neither the resource part in the ability to keep alive the past traditions of Islamic greatness anti-Perpian, which kept Islam active. The Volga area people, on the hand in direct contact with Muscovite expansion and on the other hand from other Muslims, preserved a conservative Islam based on the other multic. This we learn from the sparse writings coming from Kazan nurroundings. That is the background picture of these four groups Muslims in Russia, and I use Russia and the Soviet Union as internageable terms.

From all of this, it is important to note that only in Central Asia I a literary Turkic language develop. Elsewhere Arabic or Persian relgn tongues, were the vehicles of intellectual expression.

Juslims or Tatars, not Russians. o distinction between Muslim and Tatar; they were synonymous beaking Russian and knowing no Tatar. Yet they call themselves ousands of Tatars, for example, lived and still live in Moscow rabic, concepts of a brotherhood of the Turkish peoples of Russia ho spoke Tatar to the peasants, and perhaps wrote and knew some olga Tatars, with some aid from the Crimean Tatars. Among edumaist empire had reached its final boundaries, that the Muslims came the origins of the pan-Turanian movement to Kazan and the is important to observe that from the start there seems to have been ted Tatars who spoke Russian at the higher schools or university, to real contact with each other on any scale. I suppose one could this activity are to be found in Russian teachings and writings least in the Volga area. And it was not a matter of language, since equate or derive such ideas from the Slavophils or the pan-Slavists gan to ferment. Not being a historian of Russia, I am not concerned the empire of the Tsar. But it is highly probable that the roots It was only in the later part of the nineteenth century after the

There is a phase in the internal history of the Volga area which eserves attention and that is the missionary activity of Russian thuistians among the Muslims. After the conquest of Kazan there was rather strong attempt, over a period of several years, not concerted just still an attempt, to convert the Tatars to Christianity. It was only the time of Catherine the Great, when she issued the famous ukaz/hich made the Tatar nobles the equivalent of Russian nobility and loo another decree which gave them freedom from forced conversion, not there occurred a real change in the situation on the Volga. The sanization of the Tatars was to the advantage of Russia, and the the clouded issues involved. of this missionary activity in the Volga area is confusing because missionaries were actively supported. But to try to trace the hist corrupt and even end the use of Arabic. In this the orientalist and have meant the decline and fall of Islam on the Volga. mullahs were at one, which course of action, however, would probal would help convert Muslims to Christianity, but rather that it wou posed the use of the Tatar vernacular in Kazan, declaring not that century. Professor V. Rosen, eminent Arabist of St. Petersburg, shows the importance of this policy at the end of the nineteer vehicle of spreading Christianity against the conservative Arabic Isl The whole history of the use of the vernacular Tatar language as seeking any offices before the First World War (de facto, not de jui priests out of some of them and let them go and convert their or is no question that there was great discrimination against the Musl were accompanied by policemen when they came into the villages. Th Volga was that the Tatar priests of the Ilminsky Academy in Kaz people in their own language. One complaint of the Muslims of his aim was not to convert Tatars to Christianity directly, but to m when one reads about Ilminsky's work on the Volga one finds t of native languages by the Soviets has an old precedent. However make Tatar a literary language for missionary purposes. Thus the Muslim. Later, however, he became a cultural missionary and found a native school in Kazan. He was one of the leaders in an attempt in Islam and who seemed at first to be anti-missionary and p of religious expression. It was a distinguished Russian oriental Ilminsky, who was the first to become practically very much interes the Muslims while the mullahs continued to use Arabic as their me for the vernacular Tatar language was used as the vehicle to con-The missionaries had a great advantage over the local mull llennium, or at least freedom, was at hand.

edited by the eminent orientalist V. Barthold, had a counterpart missionary journal (Mir Islama) published before the Revolution the United States, The Moslem World. The basic purpose of both jou support the active conversion of Tatars to Christianity. A scholar d to be first broken then changed to the new 'asabiyya of the culas the vehicle of expression. Nonetheless, the Tsarist government d with some Russians perhaps even supporting the use of the vernacul the maintenance of Tatar learning, at least in the traditional for Russification of their own people and also Russians who support in the Tsarist time one finds Tatars who seemingly supported t Thus the issues were not clear, but clouded and intermingled. Ev

illy ended the journal, which he had kept mainly for scholarly poses, saying he could not even get decent Arabic type to print

r. The First World War, with the Kazakh revolt and its suppression m the Russians. Then came the Revolution, and many thought the 1916, as well as other events, served to further separate the Muslims other. In this program they were supported by the Ottoman Turks inclally after the Young Turk Revolution of 1908. uld bring all Turkish peoples and Muslims of the Tsarist empire in more than political, it was necessary to have a program which lous groups, frankly nationalistic, if one may use that word at that mich developments, and many Tatars fled to the Ottoman Empire. The Tsarist government, of course, did not conceal its unhappiness It was the embryonic pan-Turanists such as Gasprinsky (Gaspirali the Muslims continued to discuss problems and to organize into In Russia. In order to preserve their identity, cultural and reli-Yusuf Akchura, and others who woke to the dangers facing Mus-

o, for this is part of the background of the present scene. Rather I all only discuss several general, yet I feel important, points in regard rkish Congress of Baku, the Basmatchis in Central Asia, and the Islam in the USSR. th, including the founding of the various Soviet republics, the pan-I do not wish to discuss the history of the Revolution and its afternals was to convert Muslims to Christianity and Professor Barthold eventually Russian by language. How to accomplish this goal? An d culture as Turks and Muslims. The 'asabiyya of all these people her he had to learn that he was a Soviet man by culture and religion, e and religion of Soviet man. The Uzbek or Tatar should not say would be unwise for the Tatars of the Volga, the Crimea, Turks of elements to the Soviet state were obvious. But also inside the USSR nous by Ibn Khaldun, the sociologist of the fourteenth century. It erbaidzhan and Turks of Central Asia to feel their common heritage lvities of the "pan-Turanists" of the pre-Revolutionary period. One was a Turk by language and culture and a Muslim by religion, pan-Islam, the other pan-Turan. The international dangers of such wian minorities, perhaps best characterized by an Arabic word made asabiyya which can best be translated as "emotional solidarity com-The Soviets were faced with a double danger from these non-"." Here, the 'asabiyya had become two-fold, as a result of the all-out attack on Turan and Islam was unwise, especially as tasks where took most of the time and energy of the new Soviet severything had to be planned. First the immediate danger of the matchi with Enver Pasha, and such people, in other words Turan, to be eliminated. Then, after several generations Islam would atte and perish by itself. The task was to convince the Uzbek that he an Uzbek and not a Turk, the Kazakh that he was a Kazakh and r Turk. So the various republics, areas, and the like, were created. Diet impera is nothing new under the sun. Islam, however, could killed through the children. There was no need to attack Islam ex to ridicule it and to pass certain laws which took away much of effectiveness. In the long run it would fall of its own accord. This the strategy of the Soviets.

To help achieve this end, the history of Islam was re-writter Marxist lines and Islam and Muslims were relegated to the backw bourgeois past. One might dispute whether Muhammad lived slave or in a feudal society, otherwise the pattern was clear and fi and in the inexhorable course of time everyone would become a Soman anyway, just as surely as the sun would rise tomorrow.

Muslims in the Soviet Union

Richard Pipes

My remarks are designed to implement Professor Frye's. Professor being an orientalist, looked at the problems of Soviet Muslims in the orientalist's point of view; I, in turn, would like to look at the prometime from the point of view of the Russian historian.

Russia and its successor state, the Soviet Union, has not been adentely studied. Russian historians have been singularly neglectful in alling with the nationality problems in the Russian state. There are ny reasons for this, probably the principal one being the lack of lization in Russia of the fact that the Russian state was and conplude to be an empire, in many respects comparable to the great the arc contiguous to the metropolis instead of being separated from it the case with all the other great empires. Thus the Russians tend to maider their expansion into these areas a part of the growth of the most Russians did not know, and many would have vehemently nied, that they were in any sense a great imperial power. Of course,

The census of 1897, the only census taken before the Revolution, owed that the Great Russian population was actually a minority in Russian empire. The majority of the population consisted of soled minorities. In this category the Muslims occupied a prominent ce. In the census of 1897 they constituted approximately 13 to 14 cent of the total population. Nearly 13 per cent was the proportion realed by the first complete Soviet census in 1926. The census conted last year (1959) shows a slight drop in the percentage of the malim population. According to it there are between 24 and 25 million Muslims in the USSR. We cannot know the exact number because census is not a religious but a national one, and certain national oups, such as the Ossetins, for instance, are partly Muslim and partly unistian. But the figure is somewhere around 24 or 25 million, which national 12 per cent of the total population of the Soviet thon. (The decline is due partly to the mass slaughter of certain Muslim groups in the nineteen-thirties, such as the Kazakhs, and pato to the higher rate of growth of some other ethnic groups.) The owhelming majority of Soviet Muslims consists of Turks. It comes surprise to most people to learn that there are more Turks in the Sounion than there are in Turkey. There are also more Muslims the Leileve, than in the United Arab Republic. Most of these Turks Professor Frye has mentioned, are Sunni. The Azeri Turks are the important major Shiite group. Sunnis, I take it, are regarded as more "orthodox" of the two. An outsider, however, may do well to attach too much significance to such vague concepts, mindful of deputation by an English bishop of the eighteenth century, who that orthodoxy "is my doxy" while heterodoxy is "another medoxy."

they participated in the elections to the Russian parliament (Dur own newspapers, their own associations, their own political part formed) schools was established. Like the other minorities they had the started his innovations, a large network of so-called djadidist Muslims had their own schools, and particularly after Gasprinsky either in conversion or in the cultural affairs of these minorities. twentieth century the Tsarist government was not much interes reign of Catherine the Great. In the nineteenth century and the ea these efforts stopped at the end of the eighteenth century with to convert the population to Christianity, but for all practical purpo when the government made conscious, deliberate, and intensive effe whole, in their cultural life. I say "on the whole" because again, Professor Frye has mentioned, there were periods in Russian hist and in its area from the point of view of the economic and strat the Jews and Ukrainians excepted, may be described as a tradition century with the conquest of Turkestan. Unfortunately, I have under Russian rule in a succession of conquests which began in middle of the sixteenth century with the acquisition by Russia of benefits which it could derive from them. It was not interested, on imperial policy. The government was interested in a given popula the Muslim minorities, as toward practically all the other minori Muslim minorities. In very general terms the Russian policy tow the time to analyse the policy of the Russian government toward the quest of the Caucasus, and completed in the middle of the ninetee kirs, followed in the first half of the nineteenth century with the d Kazan Khanate and the Volga region and the subjection of the Bi ly of Iranians (the Tadzhiks and certain Caucasian nationalities), ca These Turks and the non-Turkish Muslim groups, consisting la that their own caucus there. In other words, they enjoyed the and paid the price of being a subject people of a traditional multipower. This situation changed drastically with the Revolution. The Communist regime is of course not a traditional power. It is the continuity between imperial Russia and the modern Communist that Certainly there are certain continuities due to geographic locanand the inheritance of certain common strategic and geopolitical thology and tradition but, by and large, in terms of outlook on life the terms of policy, the differences are abysmal, enormous and, bridgeable. This is very clearly evident in the change of policy and Islam.

The Communist regime from its advent to power has had a very linke and specific attitude toward the minorities, and a series of lices which, while subject to minor tactical adjustments, have not contally varied for the past forty years. I don't need to explain, of that the attitude of the Communist regime toward Islam as a lylon is a highly negative one. That goes without saying. What is of crest, however, is Soviet policy toward the Muslim population. This rather subtle and requires some explanation.

rry carefully with the Muslim population. This was due to two tactween the Muslims and their co-religionists abroad, and of breaking na, a policy of destroying religious institutions, of cutting off contact w Muslim elite, small to begin with, was split into several groups nk very deep roots in the consciousness of the Muslim population in the Muslim community into the maximum number of small entities. ents. This consideration necessitated a tough policy toward the Musinto. I think, in retrospect, it was unnecessarily worried about them. mt was very much afraid of pan-Islamic and pan-Turanian moverood, that is in the early twenties when the policy was being crysow that Lenin in particular attached great importance to these movewertheless, the government was worried, and there is evidence to mill proportion could be considered pan-Islamic and pan-Turanian. chalist, and some of it was given to local patriotism. Only a very maia before the Revolution or in the first years of the Revolution. lized, was torn by two opposite pulls. On the one hand, the governy own impression is that neither pan-Islamism nor pan-Turanianism part of it was profoundly religious and orthodox, some of it was The Soviet government in its policy toward Islam in the early On the other hand, however, the Soviet government had to deal signed to win their sympathies. necessitated a soft policy toward the Muslims, with concessions course entailed active Soviet propaganda in the Muslim regions. colonial possessions of the West, particularly in Asia, and tha taken away from them. He therefore felt that one must tackle believed that the Western powers could not subsist if the colonies v quite erroneously (but he was not the only one who made this err capitalism through an attack on its colonial possessions. Lenin, I th munism, and, in the second place, a flanking movement against w phasis on building up Soviet Russia as a fortress of world-wide of 1920-21 Lenin realized that one could not count on the Western capitalist chain, and that his action would immediately engender r was convinced this was simply the snapping of the weakest link ir tion in Western Europe. When Lenin made the Revolution in 1917 letariat. As a result two things happened; first of all a shift of lutions in Western Europe. But these revolutions did not occur, an disillusionment of the Soviet leadership with the chances of a rev on Islam as a world-wide revolutionary base was related to the gra sympathies of the Muslims outside the Soviet Union. This empl concessions; 2) The Soviet government was most anxious to win and to establish some sort of stability in these areas, and this inv roots in the Muslim community. It was necessary to win confic tics: 1) Not only communism but even socialism had practical

It is these contrary pulls—the desire, on the one hand, to put domestic Muslims in their place, to prevent them from merging feeling any bonds of sympathy among themselves or with their religionists abroad, and, on the other hand, the interests of the govement in spreading communism among the Muslims abroad — explain some of the vacillations of Soviet policy towards the Muslim the early twenties and to some extent since.

The pan-Islamic danger, as I have said, appears in retrospec phantom one. But there was a real danger in a Muslim movement the drew logical conclusions from the Communist admission that the for world revolution depended on the Eastern peoples. Such conclusion were drawn by an original young Volga Tatar, Sultan Galiev, which ideas deserve to be better known.

Sultan Galiev, a protege of Stalin and subsequently also his vict evolved in the early nineteen-twenties a theory which held that real conflict in the world was not between socialist countries and catalist countries but between industrial societies and backward societies argued that in the long run the interests of all the industrial soci

Moulton they be capitalist or socialist, were common. Therefore landward societies, and he had particularly in mind the Muslims, and the be just as much betrayed and persecuted by the Community that the creation of what he capitalist Westerners. Sultan to unded the creation of what he called a Colonial International the would unite all the backward nations of the world and stand up that the communist Russians as well as against the English, French, all the other Western powers. Needless to say, this earned him an ablaton from the Party, arrest and then release, which ended finally that his name is not even mentioned in the Soviet Union today. It that his name is not even mentioned in the Soviet Union today. It does were a real danger, much more so than pan-Islamism. They take nome of the difficulties the Soviet regime had and still has in the very rocky waters of foreign policy in the Muslim in, I believe, the first Koran printed in the Soviet Union. It was taken imption, that is, for the consumption of Muslims outside the Soviet o warehouses or clubs, and the whole religious establishment demolblied the mufti, I was given a Koran which had just been printed. It tion. I can recall, three years ago, when I was in Tashkent and made recently but they have been made largely for foreign conillahs were arrested, mosques were either destroyed or transformed wir things, the suppression of the group which was most active in my minor, Muslim "nationalities." This policy involved, among upp. We now have in the Soviet Union a dozen or so major, and of Stalin to power and the initiation of the five-year plans, the ed. This, in fact, has been true ever since. Some concessions have Ild enjoy practically unlimited religious freedom. In 1928, with the 18-1930. In the first ten years after the Revolution the Muslims ment destroyed as much as it could the bonds linking the various ill, in its effort to break up pan-Islamic tendencies, the Soviet govno policy. This policy did not go into effect until approximately chal cultural discrimination. It also meant a very active anti-relialing a sense of unity among the Muslims of the Soviet Union, the ionalities. I say "so-called" because the Russians in some cases had mile populations of Russia to each other. That meant, among other up, breaking up the population into a large number of so-called Tatar group, which has been and still is clearly singled out for create synthetic nationalities where there had been only tribal buy have been worked out since the early nineteen-twenties? First What are the principal lines of Soviet policy toward the Muslims from a stack of nearly wrapped and arranged books obviously pre to be handed out to foreign visitors. Limited pilgrimages to Mecca also been allowed.

crudest, the least reasonable of all attempts of Russification. into the local vocabularies. This is perhaps the grossest, in a sense Russians also managed to smuggle a great number of Russian w ten before the Revolution or Muslim religious writings which ca off from his Muslim heritage. He cannot read, presumably, books a given area. This means in effect, that the Muslim youth today i are today in the Soviet Union numerous Muslim alphabets, th population in the world that is not allowed to write in the Aralphabet but has to use the alphabet of the conquering nation. T found at home or in libraries. By means of the Cyrillic alphabet today. The Soviet Muslims, as far as I know, are the only Mu instead the Russian (Cyrillic) alphabet. This alphabet is still in Cyrillic alphabets with a few modified letters to render the sounce sound symbol. This reform was repeated again in 1939 when all of alphabet, so that certain vowels and certain consonants which Muslim nationalities had to abandon the Latin alphabet, and to ac pronounced in a certain way in a given locality were given a sep esting thing is, however, that not only was Arabic replaced by L but that each of these synthetic national groups had to have its not lend itself well to the rendition of the Turkic sounds. The i reasons for this. I am told by orientalists that the Arabic alphabet carried out in Turkey at the same time. There were certain philolo stitute a modified Latin alphabet. A similar move, of course, alphabet which all of them had used, and were forced instead to population. The Muslims were no longer allowed to keep the A government put through a reform of the alphabet used by the M moves, was the change in the alphabet. In 1928 and 1929 the S The most radical, and the most absurd, of all the anti-Mi

I need not, of course, elaborate on the absence of political self-r. The Muslim areas have no more or no less self-rule than the other are in the Soviet Union or under Soviet control. I must say in all just however, that not all things are black in the status of the Soviet N lims. Racial equality, whose absence is perhaps the principal source friction in other colonial areas, is fairly much a fact in the Source Union. You will find natural animosities, and even very intense of but I think you will not find a color bar, nor will you find serious racial discrimination. True, Russians are often given prefer tial status, but this is not due to racial prejudice. This policy, on

In the Russian tradition. It is not a particularly Soviet innotion. A particularly Soviet innovation, however, is the opening up manyous educational opportunities. There is no doubt that probting the Muslim area in the world are the opportunities for obtaining thinkal education as good as they are in the Muslim areas in the for Union.

I do not want to leave unmentioned the policy of population denation. This is not practiced today but it was practiced under Stalium and a million and a half Muslims were deported from certain durlands in or near the war zone to Central Asia and Siberia, either must they had collaborated with the Germans, or because they were putted of having collaborated, or because they were suspected of mallowed to collaborate. Some of these people have since then mallowed to come back.

I wish I had time to go into the reactions of the Muslim population various Soviet measures. They are interesting. I have conducted a mber of interviews with refugees from these areas, and have been lowing the Soviet publications on this subject, but I cannot elaborate had of time. All I can offer are some broad conclusions.

at only 1.6 per cent of the Uzbeks do not speak Uzbek but speak Kazakhs the figures are 1.6 per cent in 1959 and 2.5 per cent in me other language. Compared with the census of 1926 this figure would like to quote to you the figures for the three major Muslim unbers of a given nationality no longer speak their own language. end by statistics contained in the Soviet census indicating how many pulation of the Soviet Union not only is not becoming denationanda machine, have succeeded. There are various bits of evidence 16. Of course, language is not the only criterion of national identity onding figure for 1959 is 8 per cent, and for 1926, 10 per cent. For ages other than their own was 2 per cent. For the Tatars the correows a diminution, for in 1926 the number of Uzbeks speaking lanoups, the Uzbeks, the Tatars, and the Kazakhs. The census showed and but is in fact becoming more nationally cohesive. This is indimed my own expectations. It indicated that linguistically the Muslim of last year (1959) which rather pleased me because it conmillication in schools, through the whole vast apparatus of the propun place. In other words, I doubt whether these efforts at assimilating Indicate this. The latest, however, is that provided by the Soviet population through linguistic and alphabet manipulations, through In the first place, I don't believe that large scale assimilation has but it is one of the best, and it is significant that in this respectively.

an outlook and pathos peculiar to modern nationalism. relatively large technically trained intelligentsia, and presumably (I natural self-consciousness, and with a modern population, including is the creation of modern nationalities imbued with a modern, sec "presumably" because the evidence is only very circumstantial) but the Soviets have accelerated it. In effect, therefore, what you would have happened anyway, because it is a natural, modern prointo the secular one. My impression is that this is happening, clearly defined religious sphere which does not, on the whole, over the same role which Christianity does in the West today. There from secular life. Islam in the Muslim borderlands plays more or the West during the last two hundred years: a separation of rel to modernize it. The result is similar to that which has taken play anti-religious measures has been not so much to wipe out religio gether side by side, but they do not mix, do not intermarry, and quite separate existences. I also believe that the total effect of S munity and a Muslim community. The two work together, ligence of two self-contained communities: a Russian (western) is happening in the borderlands inhabited by the Muslims is the My impression (based on various kinds of evidence) is that

Recent Developments in Soviet Eastern Republics

Garip Sultan

Initial Steps Toward Liberalization

How have been certain changes in Khrushchev's policy toward the how peoples of the USSR. They took place in the period between how the hand the Twenty-First Party congresses (1956-59) and manifested themselves in two ways: 1) the political and cultural of the eastern republics in Soviet foreign policy has become particularly in the countries of Asia and Africa; 2) people to Central Asian nationalities are being advanced to very posts in the Party, the government, and in other institutions.

the the 29 years of Stalin's rule of the Communist Party, from the thought Party Congress in 1924 until his death in 1953, there were unally no Muslim Communists in the central organs. Up to the unteenth Party Congress in 1934, there was not one Muslim Communit among the members of the Central Committee, let alone in the thuro or the Secretariat. Only at the Seventeenth Party Congress one Uzbek, Ikramov, become a member of the Central Committee. The Eighteenth Party Congress in 1939 two Muslims, an Uzbek, upov, and an Azerbaidzhani, Bagirov, became members of the Party Congress in 1952 when, out of consideration for the tomalism which had become manifest during the Second World War, Muslims were made members of the Central Committee. However, but of the quantitative increase of Muslim membership not one allow was elected to the Presidium or the Secretariat.

Only after Stalin's death in 1953, was first secretary of the cural Committee of the Communist Party of Azerbaidzhan, Bagirov, le a candidate member of the Presidium, and even this was at the cut of Beria who wanted to win the sympathy of the Islamic peoples the struggle for power which had then begun in the Kremlin. At 'Iwentieth Party Congress in 1956, Khrushchev included his own the Presidium, to replace Bagirov who had been eliminated in nection with the Beria case. At the Twenty-First Congress in 1959, thutdinov became a member of the Presidium and the Secretariat.

so high a place in the Party hierarchy. From that time on, Mu dinov's name has often appeared as a member or the head of go ment delegations to Asian and African countries. He also hold post of chairman of the Foreign Policy Committee of the Sovi Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. At the Thirt Komsomol Congress in 1958, for the first time, two represents of Islamic Central Asia, became members of the Komsomol Cocommittee Buro. They were Kendzhabayev, a Kazakh, and Murtaz an Uzbek.

circles. Eastern Soviet writers now meet their Arab, Pakistani, up broader possibilities for Soviet influence over Oriental lit gave rise to the so-called "spirit of Tashkent," which in turn op ers of Asian and African Countries held in Tashkent in 1958, w of Asia and Africa in Conakry in April 1960. Writers from Turke republics at the Second Conference for the Solidarity of the Cour tablished by the Soviet government for the purposes of political preganda, is the Tadzhik writer Tursun-Zade, who also headed the S Indonesian colleagues more often than previously. Tataria, and Azerbaidzhan were prominent at the Conference of delegation consisting entirely of representatives from Soviet ea of the Soviet Committee for the Solidarity of Asian Countries Eastern Studies of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR. At the the Tadzhik historian Gafurov who is director of the Institu terms of scholarship are delivered to the countries of the East thr scientific work are also being noticeably used for foreign propag carried out in the countries of Asia and Africa. Communist ide within the Soviet Union, Muslims specializing in literary, social While Muslim Communists are being promoted to higher pos Uzbek, Kazakh, Tatar, Turkmen, and Azerbaidzhani literary ware being translated into Arabic, Persian, Hindi, and Urdu. secondary schools in Tashkent (Uzbekistan) and Kazan (Tatars are now offering instruction in Arabic. Chinese has become a requouse at the Kazakh State University in Alma-Ata.

One now reads quite frequently of song or dance groups of east origin, particularly from Uzbekistan, Kirgizia, Bashkiria, or Aze dzhan, appearing in Cairo, Delhi, Rangoon, and other large citic Africa and in Asia. Trade-union, youth, and writers' delegations invited from various Asian countries, on the other hand, to visit Central Asian republics, where they are shown the "economic cultural achievement of peoples formerly backward and oppressed the Muelling of the Soviet Union are no longer isolated as they during the time of Stalin, but what has prompted Khrushchev to home changes? The evidence available in Soviet sources leads in bullove that certain internal questions of a political nature the plane the Party has for the East are both important factors the recent decrease in the isolation of the Muslim peoples of the

Internal Aspects

It was factors which have forced Khrushchev to direct more of his natural to the Muslim peoples in his internal policies are the instant of importance to the Soviet economy of the Muslim territories the nationalism which is a product thereof. Important oil resources bound industry is also widely developed in these areas. The major and industrial center. Central Asia is also considered a major lobreeding area. During the so-called period of "socialist reconcillon," initiated by Stalin, the natural resources of these territories and widely developed. In Khrushchev's economic plan for the period comprehensive construction of Communism" the eastern republics and hold a significant place.

Along with the industrialization of the Muslim territories, the hural level of the population has also been raised. A whole new, two working class of skilled workers has arisen. Qualified engineers, hulchans and administrative personnel, as well as scientists, writers, apposers and artists have emerged. The Muslim peoples have now hured and are fully capable of self-government. The feeling of kwardness has been replaced with national dignity. Local intelluals are no longer willing to allow Moscow to assume the tradinal role of a metropolis of a colonial period, even though this policy now followed in the name of "proletarian internationalism" and the national society."

The nationalism born under these circumstances is the second for with which Khrushchev has had to reckon. Muslim nationalism the on various forms during the Second World War and thereafter decould no longer be ignored. The Twentieth Party Congress was numing point. In comparison with Soviet nationality policy under alln, based on brutal power verging on genocide, Khrushchev level something of a "thaw," a "thaw" ideologically explained as roturn to the nationality policies of Leninism." In his report to Twentieth Party Congress, Khrushchev did not speak of the "im-specialists in the provinces . . . almost every enterprise was man takes had been permitted in nationality policy, mistakes which now in need of "serious correction." He explained the need for economic and cultural constructions." Khrushchev admitted that have also grown, and the general cultural level of all the peoples o USSR has risen sharply." grown in every republic, trained and experienced non-Russian co "serious correction" by saying that earlier, when "there had been these "the most interesting form of all their practical work in le from Moscow]. Today the situation has changed-as industry by a union ministry [i. e. was fully in the hands of Russians sen them not to scorn national peculiarities and differences, but to cor warned the Russian Communists that "petty patronage must n will remove the sources of conflict and mutual distrust . . . " non-Russians was intended. Khrushchev cited Lenin to the effec evident that an improvement in the relations between Russian tolerated in the relationships with the union republics." He also "only enormous attention to the interests of the various nation friendship among "all the peoples of the USSR." From the tex congresses, but gave first priority to the question of strength portant role of the Great Russian people," the theme of previous A

The erstwhile violation of the rights of the non-Russian natio ties was blamed on "Stalin's personality cult." Khrushchev and lieutenants condemned the wholesale deportation in 1944 of ce Muslim peoples of the North Caucasus: the Balkars, the Chechen-In and the Karachais. In January 1957 the USSR Supreme Soviet pass law returning these national minorities to their former territories restoring their autonomy. Only the Crimean Tatars, who had been deported, were not given the right to return to the Crimea whad since been incorporated into the Ukrainian SSR.

Reforms were also introduced in other walks of life, and affor some relief to the Muslim peoples. In historiography, for insta historians began devoting greater attention to national liberal movements under Tsarism. The late Soviet historian, Anna Pankratt presumably with Khrushchev's consent, decried in her speech at Twentieth Party Congress the adverse effect that the "personality chad had in causing Soviet historians to describe historical figure ethnic minorities as "reactionaries" and "agents of foreign powe While this did not cause the abandonment of the thesis that the nexation of non-Russian peoples to Russia was good, it changed atmosphere of scholarship. Thus, during the meetings of the US handland of the "voluntary annexation of Bashkiria to handlar historians were able to maintain that there were no hand that one had to rely, therefore, on secondary sources, and that one had to rely, therefore, on secondary sources. The liquidated or personality cult" was the first step toward handland personalism." Among those rehabilitated were Fitrat, hoursely nationalism." Among those rehabilitated were Fitrat, hoursely nationalism." Among those rehabilitated were Fitrat, hoursely nationalism. Among those rehabilitated were Fitrat, hoursely a Tatar classic author, Tinchurin, a well-known dramatist, and other persons who during the Executive Committee of the Muslim and other persons who during the twenties and thirties had an important part in the cultural development of the Muslim in the various Turkic literatures have had upon each other, and the handli, Uzbek, and Tatar writers have begun to study the influthe languages in which differences had arisen as a result of Stalin's hence of the literatures of the Muslim East." Linguists have placed and of Stalinism, this question was viewed only in the light of one which culminated in the introduction of the Russian alphabet. pulgn against the linguistic and cultural unity of the Muslim Illiance of the eastern classics in their formation. During the munissions for the Standardization of the Orthography of the the agenda the question of standardizing the orthography of the but of Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. Khrushchev the republics of Central Asia and of Tatarstan. Some concessions y policy toward the eastern nations was not changed. This became are nelly permitted these various concessions in the hope of harness-We Languages" have been established by the councils of ministers hour upon the implementation of the policies charted at the Twenty-"common Soviet state." In substance, however, the Party's nationalso made in the representation of the eastern republics in the Party Congress. the Browing nationalism of the Muslim peoples to loyalty toward progressive influence of Russian literature" and the "reactionary

Ideological Offensive

In regard to ideology, Turkestan is considered "the experimental of communism" and of Soviet interests in the East. The Soviet low regard their eastern republics as material and psychological bases for the future Sovietization of the countries of Asia and The nationality and colonial question, and its exploitation to about the "revolution of the proletariat," is basic to Leninism circular letter to Soviet deputies and Party organizations, dated ary 12, 1919, Stalin wrote: "By its geographic location, Turke the bridge which connects socialist Russia with the enslaved n of the East." Now, in the light of the awakening of the nations, the Party thinks that the time has come to expand the ploitation of the national liberation struggle of the nations of and Africa.

At the Twentieth and Twenty-First congresses a "peaceful munist offensive" was announced. Khrushchev defined the objoint this "peaceful offensive" as follows: The backward countries of and Africa are to go over to socialism, by-passing the capitalistic of development, as in Kazakhstan and Central Asia.

The final objective of the "peaceful offensive of Communism defined by the Soviet academician, Mints, at the scientific confededicated to the "unification of Central Asia with Russia," which place in Tashkent in May 1959. His definition was as follows: 1 cialist construction in Central Asia will be repeated in the revolutionary struggle of the nations in Asia and Africa; 2) Only sociensures the economic and political independence of the once bad colonial nations; 3) As is evident from the experience with the Casian republics, the backward nations by-passing capitalism need aid of the "victorious proletariat of the progressive nations" in transition to socialism.

Retroaction

How does "communism" in the eastern republics look in the of national policy after the Twenty-First Congress of the Comm Party of the Soviet Union? At that congress a "period of expa construction of communism" was announced. As regards the national ty question, the thesis was advanced to bring about "the spir rapprochement of nations and to prepare the necessary precondition for the merging of nations in the future world Communist social The period of the "political thaw" of nationalities came to an The creation of the sovnarkhozes (economic councils) did not intro any significant changes into the economic rights of the eastern reputer example, there are nine sovnarkhozes in Kazakhstan, but eight them are headed by officials sent from Moscow. A similar situation of the sovnarament of the republics, the Gost local personnel, an article in the Party journal Komin 1959) stated: "One must not select personnel solely in blade of nationality, without considering political qualities." In which this principle, Khrushchev reshuffled the Party apparatus in 1959. Babayev, the First Secretary of the Turkmen was relieved of his duties, because he, in violation of directives blade with the proportion of Turkmen employed in the povernment agencies to 70 per cent. Kamalov, first secretary thou povernment agencies to 70 per cent. Kamalov, first secretary were removed for the same reasons.

I hande rule in the Muslims republics is that when the post of normally is occupied by a local Communist, a representative of new musly a Russian, holds the post of second secretary. Before computonal appointment of the Kazakh Kunayev in 1960, the that an Party organization had always been headed by Russian musly always representatives of Moscow.

the Russian language is also becoming officially more dominant. In the taught in schools beginning with the second grade. The officially the school with the develop further the system of public education," made it languer obligatory but voluntary to teach children their native obligatory but voluntary to teach children their native langue. Practical conditions make it necessary for local cadres to Russian if they wish to get good jobs. Therefore some parents their children to Russian-language schools. In Kazakhstan, for the eastern republics the Farty is now following a policy of the native population into national minorities by importing and Ukrainians. In Kazakhstan, the Kazakhs compose only the rent of the total population.

The "Communist experiment" in the eastern republics has thus not minuted economic and political independence, but, on the contrary, mublished a new form of colonial subjugation of smaller peoples.

Summary of the Discussion

The chairman of the session, Professor Tibor Halaši-Kun, the discussion period by inviting questions. The first question addressed to Professor Richard Frye and concerned the relations the Tadzhik language to Persian.

Professor Frye stated it depended on which orientalist in the Union is queried on whether the Tadzhik language is any diffrom Persian. Nevertheless, the Soviet claim that Tadzhik is a se language seems to have died down in recent years. Persian be Arabic characters are being printed in Stalinabad, and some Tabooks are printed in Arabic characters and read like Persian alt they are officially in Tadzhik. The question is where a language and a dialect begins. Tadzhiki is very close to the Persian spok at the Soviets seem to do: Tadzhiki, Kabuli, and Persian. The prob thus not only a scholarly one but is also nationalistic, and has a great deal of confusion. It is true that there are certain Tadzhik lects which are completely unintelligible to any Persian and one pends on scholarly views on the subject. However, it is doubtfut the Soviet government is very much concerned with these prophilology regarding them. Professor Frye then asked Professor Ripipes to comment on this question from the point of view of Spolicy.

Professor Pipes thought the question was part of a larger S policy to claim an autochthonous status for each of the larger natitities of the Soviet Union. Russian culture is being depicted as au thonous, and independent of Byzantine, Western, and Asian influ The Turkic and the Tadzhik cultures are similarly being separated their common Islamic, Turkish, and Iranian heritage. This, of co is being done to fight pan-Islamic and pan-Iranian tendencies of the Soviets fear. The policy is not accidental, or, as the Soviets wasay, using their favorite Russian term, ne sluchaino.

The next question concerned the significance of the Congress of Peoples of the East in Baku in September 1920. Professor Pipes rep

While the Baku Congress did not have much success, it had made rits flag.

In Humblon then turned to the question of the growth of unity in the Turkic peoples in the USSR. Professor Pipes opined that he manded any trends which would strengthen unity. One may be all by a very natural difference which exists in Soviet society behalved the printed and "official" and what people really think and among themselves. If a Soviet orientalist honestly admits (as he whole, this does not reflect a change in official policy. The Party hand necessarily followed in private conversations.

Includes on linguistic grounds. The Turks who live in the Soviet many linguistic grounds. The Turks who live in the Soviet many linguistic unity among the Kipchak Turks or Turki Turks. It is posteroute linguistic unity among the Kipchak Turks which means liming together of Kazan Turks, Bashkirs, Balkars, Crimean and the various Turkic groups which once lived in the Caucasus. It was and vice versa. The Azerbaidzhanis, moreover, belong to linguistically to understand a linguistic moreover, belong to Mountains there are several smaller groups of people that the form a fourth group. And, finally, there are independent whose Turkic background is less known, such as the Yakuts Chuvash. To bring all these various groups together, at least action the Turkologists, is nothing short of a pleasant dream.

the next question concerned Russification. According to Professor III, the policy of active Russification, which means the identification which means the identification like loviet state and the Communist Party with the Great Russian III, did not begin until the early nineteen-thirties. Prior to that, the Russia was still a multinational state where all languages were indeed, theoretically, as equal. In the nineteen-twenties the Party indeed Great Russian chauvinism as the principal danger to its less. In the thirties, however, minority nationalism became the danger. By 1939 Stalin was entirely dependent on Great Russian unalism to carry him through the Second World War. The subject some very peculiar "universality" as was claimed by Dostoyevs This, of course, does not mean that the Russians are distinguis receptivity to other cultures and a certain amount of racial to partly through continuous contact, the Russians have devel they have freely intermarried. Thus, partly through intermarria centuries C. E., they have been in contact with a great var races, the Turks, the Iranians, Finns, Balts, and others with they entered their present territory, between the seventh and affinity for other cultures and ethnic groups. From the momen category. Throughout their history the Russians have shown rem ethos. Russian culture seems very clearly to belong to this are two kinds of cultures. Some are centripetal and self-con subject, which he considered rather tentative. According to him foreign influences and to create and develop them within the Other cultures are centrifugal and absorptive. The latter tend to color line in Russia. Professor Pipes advanced a hypothesis also brought up the question of the absence of a racial probl

The next subject for discussion was the change in the alpused by the Turkic peoples in the USSR. According to Professor the abandonment of the Arabic alphabet could have been jusomewhat on philological grounds. The decision to introduc Cyrillic alphabet, on the other hand, was purely political in its vation—it was due to an effort to Russify the Muslims by a gintroduction of Russian words into the teaching of local lang making it possible for the natives, by learning the Russian algunda basic vocabulary, to make the transition to full use of Rult was a crude and an entirely ineffective method. Khrushchev's to change it after Stalin's death indicates that he does not interest that the stalinist nationality policy. This aspect of Stalinist could be easily changed, and so doing would win the gratitue Soviet Muslims without really endangering Khrushchev's power.

Mr. Garip Sultan explained why the Cyrillic alphabet wa introduced in 1926. The Turkic scholars who participated in the Congress that year were opposed to the change. Turkic socialist Communists cooperated with Lenin at the time for the sole purpolaring their claims to independence recognized, and Lenin haccede to their wishes for the sake of cooperation. Another reason that the Latin alphabet was about to be introduced in Turkey at time. Actually, there was an attempt before the Baku Congresintroduce the Cyrillic alphabet, but it was not even submitted debate. The Turkic groups, especially the Tatars and the Kaz al the idea since the Arabic script maintained cultural and lin-

Halaši-Kun added a few comments on why the Latin phaced the Arabic alphabet in the Turkic languages in the late nineteen-twenties there was a tendency, even among to change the Cyrillic to the Latin alphabet. Furthermore, to change the various Turkic language groups in Russia literary language called Chagatay. This was written the same where but pronounced differently in different localities. The why the Soviets introduced the Latin alphabet was to this lingua franca and develop local differences in speech. In the Latin alphabet was introduced in Turkey would not not of the reasons, since this was carried out later than language in the Soviet Union.

Illian In Russia before the Revolution considered themselves primally policies, however, this religion is still of importance, to be national consciousness. Religious identity is gradually giving himself as such, but he would, nevertheless, feel a certain with other Muslims because Islam carries with it an outlook, and a way of life. As for the intensity of national feeling, puricularly strong in areas where a large number of Russians and the Russians are similar to those existing between the would French Algerians.

Mr. Sultan thereupon replied to a question concerning the teaching Mahle In Soviet schools. Arabic has been introduced in the schools aran and Tashkent. The cadres thus trained could be used in immuling Soviet policy in the Near and Middle East. Unofficially, has a positive effect on Muslims in the USSR, since it makes it to them to re-establish cultural contacts with the Near and Milly East.

At 12:15 P.M. the chairman closed the discussion.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION

Soviet Policy Towards the Middle East

Colonel G. E. Wheeler

The past five years have witnessed the latest of Russia's attempts to establish her paramount influence in the Middle E is the most serious of these attempts because it is the most calculated and because Russia has never been so powerful as she is today.

Russia's relations with the Arab countries are of very recent but her association with the Muslim world is far older and intimate than that of any other European state. In the first place Mongols who dominated Russian lands from the middle of the teenth century to the end of the fifteenth century were early conviceded to annex the Muslim Khanates of Kazan and Astrakhan these have been an integral part of Russia since the sixteenth century the seventeenth century Russia's frontiers may be a five the end of the seventeenth century Russia's frontiers may be the end of the nineteenth century the southern fring the Russian empire from the Crimea to Outer Mongolia was, with those of Georgia and Armenia, almost exclusively peopled by lims, whose number, including those of the Volga region, amount to nearly 20 million. It is highly significant that the Muslim Russia, unlike those of other empires, have never been separated the metropolitan country by the sea.

Russia's present frontiers with Turkey and Persia (which with minor modifications still mark the limit of her nineteenth cen expansion) can be regarded as reasonable in the circumstances for over a century Russia has cherished ambitions which stretch beyond these frontiers, namely, the establishment of effective cor over the eastern Mediterranean and the head of the Persian Gulf to the Revolution she was prevented from realizing these ambitipartly by her own political and economic backwardness and passemed to be very near gaining at least one of her objectives: Istand the Straits were promised to her by the Sykes-Picot agreement of 1940 area to the south of Batum and Baku, in the general direction of Persian Gulf, was recognized as the centre of the territorial ambit has bullerto attended Russian hopes and plans has deflected let caverament from aims so closely bound up with Russia's and prographical position.

Middle East had been no soviet union's him was partly due to the Middle East had been no him with those of Tsarist Russia. This was partly due to be made to soviet ineptitude and miscalculation. In 1941 Russian and in Turkey and Persia was less than it had been in however, Soviet missions had been opened in Cairo, Beirut, and Baghdad, and the Soviet Army was once more in occument Persia. With the defeat of Germany, Russia was now her attempt to bring about the disintegration of Persia and 1946 showed that the Soviet leaders had not yet that the direct action and subances by the Pan-Arab nationalist ideology of Abd an-Nasir with militarist implications; of the Bandung Conference with its un of the Baghdad Pact with what appeared to the Middle East at the Twentieth Party Congress in February 1956. dopments were made during 1955 and received formal confirmay and ideology which were necessary to take advantage of these Increasingly anti-Western impetus. The adjustments of Soviet matton of the five principles of peaceful co-existence; and of great input even earlier. But it did not become manifest until 1955, when by probably began to take shape after Stalin's death in 1953, or leveloping new methods and a more positive policy. The new Min 1947 the Soviet government appeared to adopt a much more of Africa and Asia emerged. The year 1955 saw the founhund outlines of present Soviet policy towards the "uncommitted" on evidently suggested to the Soviet Government the advisability hum and conciliatory attitude towards the countries of the Middle Nationalist and neutralist trends and signs of Anglo-American

An essential preliminary in the appreciation of any military or ultal situation is definition of the objective. The aims of Soviet by lowards the Middle East are a subject on which there has not a general agreement in the West. Some people insist that the ultimalm of Soviet policy in the Middle East is the establishment there of international communism, as if this were an end in Such a view presupposes that Soviet policy is nowadays more by the ideology of communism than by what the Sovie Russia if you like, considers to be its national interests. The debatable matter, but it is perhaps important to remember though many things have changed in Russia, since the Reve there remain certain immutable factors, such as geography, and national character. These factors, I submit, contribute more formulation of foreign policy than any ideology or religion.

military pacts with Middle East countries. The present techniq accused, it is often forgotten that the Soviet Union has no ne peaceful penetration could almost overnight be exchanged for ably with the military preparations of which the West is cons over, while in the eyes of the Middle East they seem to contrast alarming, are likely to prove more dangerous in the long run. directed against the West. These methods, although superficial and clergy, in what is called "movements for national liber support for all elements, including the bourgeoisie, propertied c reliance on local Communist parties, in favor of moral and m donment of earlier methods of subversion, violent revolution at present advocated by the Soviet Government amount to the on the means by which this aim could best be attained. The since the Revolution, but that they have often changed their will agree that this aim has been in the minds of Soviet leader the eastern Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. I think most or, if you like, Soviet, political, economic, and cultural influe is still what it was over a century ago-the establishment of R It is at least permissible to suppose that Russia's ultima

The years 1956 and 1957 were in many ways profitable one Soviet policy. The failure of the Suez venture was widely considered by the Arabs to be the result of Soviet intervention, and the Surion began to appear as the undoubted defender of Middle rights. Western propaganda about the Soviet arms build-up in Fand Syria and about the possible dispatch of Soviet volunteers more reinforced Arab convictions about Soviet readiness to fight their before them if the need should arise, not only against the West against Israel. During 1957 and the first half of 1958 the opinion widespread that except for Iraq and Jordan, the Arab countries lost to the West and that Soviet influence would spread apace. Creation of the United Arab Republic, the disturbances in Leba mally even the coup d'état in Iraq were all thought of as victories in fact, however, the Soviet Government was very massivings on the subject of Arab nationalism.

in preveniment is at present most anxious to avoid In well precipitate a war in the Middle East, a situation which the e of made embarrassment. It would be different if the Iraqi frontier had allowely on the USSR; but as it does not, the establishment in al the Iraqi Communist Party, or rather Parties, have been a and an even now regards the situation in Iraq with equanimity. at hom being a source of comfort to the Soviet Union, the acin March 1959, Khrushchev said that Nasir's ambition to make imperially move, but it was pointed out that the Arab unity Communist government in a country situated as Iraq is situated property freedom-loving aspirations" in the UAR. Dissatisfaction supplies of the countries concerned; he denounced the "measures man of the UAR was not realizable in the face of the opposition of in Arab nationalism. In his address to the Iraqi economic dele-Hann's campaign against communism and his attitude towards after the coup d'état were decisive in modifying the Soviet attiment rould be used for purposes contrary to the interest of the republic was not unqualified. Its creation was welcomed as an halmont of the UAR in February 1958. Soviet welcome for the in idealingheal limitations of the rapprochement between the Soviet the HAR did not mean, however, that the Soviet government and the Arab countries began to appear more sharply after the

It is probably true to say that the West has gravely underestinal the importance of Middle Eastern, and particularly Arab, naallom But I think it is equally true to say that the Russians have the overestimated the extent to which they can exploit this nationin in their own interests in the same way as they have done with Muslim peoples of Transcaucasia and Central Asia.

Any diallusionment which the Soviet government may feel on the put of Arab nationalism, has not impelled them to adopt a more pumbling attitude towards Israel. Israel is classed with the USA, and France, as an oppressor nation. Nevertheless, Soviet to undinually return to the theme that Israel and the Arabs, if in the merely a "product of imperialism." There is always a sugnificant any impression of direct Soviet interference or involvement a dispute to which the Soviet Union is not a party.

of these matters will soon be brought up again. Ardahan conditions for its renewal. It seems probable that one or regime and the restoration to the USSR of the territories of Kars 1945 when the Soviet government made the revision of the St Treaty of Neutrality and Non-Aggression has been in abeyance as affording possibilities for a new Soviet approach. The Turko-Sc some time and they will certainly regard the latest developments has been studying the Turkish situation attentively and critically too hard to crack and must therefore be by-passed for the pre-Judging from the writings of Soviet experts, the Soviet govern Soviet government has regarded these two countries as nuts which simply means that, at any rate since the Second World War, tration on the Arab states, and further east on Afghanistan and I the independence of Turkey and Persia. The present Soviet con policy that its ultimate aim can only be achieved by doing away It has always been an axiom of Tsarist and Soviet Middle or later have to make some further attempt to reestablish Soviet in downrall of the present Persian regime are not fulfilled it will soon Soviet Union Persia remains the keystone. If its predictions about the receded still further with the changed situation in Iraq. But for against Persia. This possibility, not perhaps a very strong one, a common frontier with Iraq might resort once again to direct active rise to some apprehension lest the Soviet Union in its desire to achie by negotiating a new treaty with her. The failure of this attempt ga made a serious attempt to wean Persia away from Western influer largely because of the new situation in Iraq, the Soviet government administration between 1951 and 1953. At the beginning of 19 less passive attitude which the Russians took towards Dr. Mosadde but extremely expensive, and this fact no doubt explains the more direct action and subversion in 1945 and 1946 was not only ineffect the present regime there ever since October 1958. The last attempt fulminating against Persia and predicting the imminent downfall With only brief pauses, the Soviet propaganda machine has b

The area composed of north-west Persia, north-east Iraq, eastern Turkey and Transcaucasia is a particularly sensitive one for all the countries concerned, the Soviet Union not excepted. I do not believe that the Russians are at all confident of their ability to keep the situation in this area under their control. Some people think that they may find a solution in creating an independent Kurdistan. The Russians have undoubtedly considered this possibility, but they are almost their support for the Kurds in their struggle for freedom within their support for the Kurds in their struggle for freedom within the words of the principal Soviet part on Kurdish affairs, Kurdoyev, presumably himself a Kurd, "The way to the solution of the Kurdish people know well that the hundish workers with the progressive forces of the Persian, Turkland Iraqi peoples and the formation of one front of struggle for and they live the Russians have already quite enough nationality with without creating new ones.

A dispassionate appraisal of the conduct of Soviet Middle East that y in the past and of the advantages and disadvantages of the soviet Position reveals a picture which shows little of that that superhuman skill, prescience, and assurance which it has of the superhuman skill, prescience, and assurance which it has of the superhuman still prescience, and assurance which it has of the superhuman still of this writing that it is "little more the basis not only of middle Eastern political events into Marxist-Leninist continual categories." But this is to underestimate the cardinal weakness ideology which must always compromise in the interests of milley and of a policy which must always seek an ideological justificial on the main direction of official thinking.

The actual and potential advantages of the Soviet position in the Middle East today are considerable and must be squarely faced. The advantages of geographical proximity and of a totalitarian government whall Street or the City of London are obvious. The same may be said of the advantage enjoyed by a newcomer to the Middle Eastern scene, to make out of its sponsorship of peace and its concentration on Middle Eastern country has ever seen any Soviet armed forces, whereas those of the West have been a familiar sight all over the Middle East (or upwards of 40 years. And there is a subconscious feeling, particularly among the Arabs, that in spite of its show of military force, the West has been unable to make the grade or to replace the paramount power exercised by Ottoman rule. Other factors working in the Soviet favor are due to Soviet initiative; among them is the Soviet ability to draw on the Union's now vast academic resources for organized research into every kind of Middle East problem—political, economic, and cultural—and for the training of expert personnel for employment in Middle East countries.

There are two factors whose advantage to the Russians is now somewhat less than it appeared a few years ago. There are signs that the fiction of economic aid without strings is wearing somewhat thin and consequently losing its attraction. Secondly the Soviet Union has so far made only minimal use of the six Soviet Muslim republics abutting on the Middle East. This can only mean that the Soviet authorities are aware of the contradiction which exists between their supports of it in the Middle East. Great as are the material achievements in the Muslim Union republics, a genuine lifting of the barrier between them and the Muslims of the Middle East, still supposed to be under the yoke of colonialism, might have disastrous results for the USSR: Muslims both inside and outside the USSR might realize for the first time the difference between the status of the Union republics and the nationalism which is tolerated by or can be wrested from the West.

Finally there is what might be called the balancing factor of Anglo-American cooperation in Middle East affairs. Where this falters, and it is senseless to pretend that it never does so, Soviet prestige among the Middle Eastern peoples prospers and that of the West wanes. When it is firm and strong as over Azerbaidzhan in 1946 and over Lebanon and Jordan in the autumn of 1958, the reverse takes place and Soviet policy becomes cautious. The natural difficulties in achieving and maintaining this cooperation are great and they are constantly added to by Soviet propaganda, particularly on the subject of oil—proof, if one were needed, of the importance the Soviet Union attaches to the matter. In the Middle East more than anywhere else, concerted Anglo-American action spells ruin for Soviet policy. The rarity of sud action is one of the main reasons for the precarious situation in the Middle East today.

Compared with past years the situation in the Middle East is a present relatively quiet; but it remains a power vacuum and as sud an arena for power politics. At present it cannot be said that an power wields decisive influence in the area and it is on obtaining sud influence as was formerly held by the West that the Soviet Union is intent. For the moment it believes that it can achieve its aim by peaceful penetration. Its task is not an easy one for it still has much leeway to make up, for instance, in business methods and in adroitness in dealing with Middle East governments. It still has to oust English from its intrenched position as the language of western culture and commercial intercourse.

The task of the West is equally if not more difficult. While it may appreciate the need for removing its unfortunate and undeserved reputation for bellicosity, it cannot afford to forget that the present Soviet methods of peaceful penetration might quite suddenly be replaced by those of direct action or subversion.

Communism and the Arab World

Saadat Hasan

Many an article has been written in the past about Communist penetration into the Middle East. From reading such articles, published in Western newspapers, one might get the impression that certain Arab countries have embraced communism or have become Russian satellites. Indeed, more than one Arab state has been referred to by some Western journalists in the last five years as sympathetic to communism or even as Communist dominated.

Both Egypt and Syria until their merger on February 21, 1958 and even for a short period afterwards, were referred to and labeled as such. The same is being said today about the Rupublic of Iraq. Had such reports been truthful and factual, they would have been a matter of great concern not only to the West but to the Arabs as well.

There is no doubt that the reports describing Egypt and Syria as being pro-Communist proved to be contrary to the facts and without foundation. Those reports were only alarming to certain individuals in the West. The Arabs themselves never took them seriously. The Arabs viewed this alarm as primarily the result of the determination of certain Western leaders to continue to regard the Arab world as part of their sphere of influence. Many a Western leader referred to the Arab world as being "lost" to the West, as if the Arab world had ever been the property of the West.

In my opinion, the reports that were disseminated were primarily the result of certain allegations and accusations, the result of certain policies followed by Western leaders who refused to realize that the Arabs of today are not the Arabs of yesterday, leaders who refused to walk with history and insisted on walking behind history. Those leaders, unaccustomed to see any Arab government emerge on the scene to pursue a policy independent from those that were dictated in London, Paris, or Washington, were really alarmed when some Arab governments broke away from the isolationary measures that were imposed upon them by the West.

Two reservations ought to be mentioned at the outset, in order to set the record straight.

Though communism has been operating in the Middle East for about forty years, Arab Communists constitute a small infinitesimal regment of the population. Communism itself is outlawed in each and every Arab state and is considered a subversive movement by the respective governments. Thus it operates underground in secret groupings and organizations.

Could we assume that the situation in Iraq today is the same as It was in Egypt in 1956-58? This is a question that is very difficult to answer at this time. Only time, in my opinion, will supply the mswer. But one thing seems certain; a face-to-face confrontation between Arab nationalism and communism has started to take place.

This confrontation will, and should, focus the attention of those who are interested in the Middle East on the outcome of that struggle which will undoubtedly have tremendous influence on the Arab nationalist movement by helping to define its ideological and philosophical tenets. It will help to crystallize the political and economic aspirations of the Arab people. Moreover, the outcome of that struggle will have outside world, whether it is the West or the East or those who have not yet committed themselves to either camp. It is erroneous and misleading to assume that the world is divided only into two camps, "East" and "West," conveniently forgetting that the vast majority of the nations of the world have not joined either one. The tendency in the West is to ignore the existence of a third alternative in policy that could be pursued.

This confrontation between Arab nationalism and communism meems to have come as a surprise to many a person, but although those in the Arab world who are interested in the development of ideologies and aware of the history of the Communist party were not surprised that this struggle started, they were, nevertheless, surprised at the liming. They were surprised by when it started. It came at a time when the Soviet Union was enjoying high prestige in the Arab world. Very few Arab nationalists thought that the Communist Party in Iraq, or in any other Arab state, whether by its own choice or through the instigation and direction of higher forces, would then emerge as a competitor for power. On the contrary, Arab nationalists rightly assumed that the Communists would have more to lose than to gain by emerging as contenders for power because they would have to endure the wrath of all the Arab countries and be prepared for a long and, maybe, a bitter struggle.

Though it was never the goal nor the intention of Arab nationalists to seek a face-to-face confrontation with communism and thereby to open a new battlefront at this juncture in Arab history, when Arabs are primarily preoccupied with a long and bitter struggle against the forces of traditional colonialism and neo-colonialism and against the forces of expansionist Zionism, the Arabs nevertheless have long been aware that they must clarify their position regarding communism. The necessity of defining a positive stand on communism as a total system was imperative to the Arabs in order to discover the appeal that this system has to the minds and hearts of people. This seemed essential because communism was parading as a final result of all the experiences and philosophies known to man, and as the new faith, the faith by which humanity was to abide in the future.

Formulating an Arab position with regard to communism was also essential due to the ideological and political impact that communism has had on Europe and certain parts of the Far East. This necessity of defining the Arab stand was not the result of the direct impact that communism has had upon the Arab scene. Whatever contact there had been between communism and Arab society had been primarily superficial and temporary.

Moreover, the conviction of Arab nationalists that their homeland is an integral part of the world and that Arab destiny is linked to that of the rest of the world, made the definition of an Arab stand on communism essential. Isolationism, indifference, and disinterest have no place in the mind of Arab nationalists. What takes place between the East and the West, what success communism achieves in Asia or in Europe, what alliances and pacts the United States initiates and sponsors could not but be of importance to Arab nationalists, for they are partners to world peace and stability and are just as concerned with such universal problems as the rest of the world.

The Arab stand on communism may be divided into two basic components depending on the nature of the stand: political and ideological. Although the political stand in general is dependent upon and stems from the ideological stand, realism, political flexibility, and the necessary consideration of prevailing circumstances make it imperative, on occasion, to shelve ideology for the sake of political considerations. The political stand should be a means to guarantee the continuous and successful perpetuation of the ideological, and should always be viewed as a means to achieve its true maturity. The successful expression of the ideological stand will depend primarily on the ability to enter into a truce with one of the many dangers that may confront the ideology while acting against a more imminent danger. The capacity to post-pone dealing with one threat while concentrating on another more immediate one is of the utmost importance. Such tactics, based on flexibility and no sacrifice of the ideological values, are necessary and accepted practices in diplomacy.

Any political stand on communism must take into consideration the changing character of communism itself. Communism today has become almost alien to Marx's theories and ideologies. In other words, a political stand vis-à-vis communism cannot be static and fixed if this stand is to be successful and effective. The political stand must also at all times be a true expression of the national interest, generated from the national way of life and from the ideological tenets and in harmony with national thought and values.

It is axiomatic to state that the success of an Arab nationalist movement, revolutionary in its philosophies and doctrines, dynamic in its methods and tactics, in expressing the needs of the Arab society and championing the cause of the masses of the people struggling to attain their aspirations of independence, unity, and a more abundant life based on freedom and social justice, will make the justification for the existence of Communist parties on the Arab scene unnecessary and the adoption of communism as an ideology, whether partially or completely, unessential. The extent to which the latent potentialities and the revolutionary capabilities of the Arab nationalist movement are realized will determine the extent to which the door will remain open for communism to capitalize on the weaknesses and undesirable conditions in the Arab world.

world Zionism, temporary tactical co-existence with communism rather as long as the Arabs remain involved actively in a struggle against problems pertaining to the restoration of their long lost freedom, and mined to maintain the status quo, as long as the Arabs have basic with colonialism operating effectively on the Arab scene and detergreat advantage. As long as the Arabs are exposed to and confronted ditions upon which communism flourishes and which it uses to its own threat that breeds communism by perpetuating the undesirable conous. To the Arabs, colonialism has been a real and an immediate confronting threats they considered more immediate and more dangermunism and becoming pre-occupied with this struggle, for they were alists could not for a long time assume the artificial role of fighting comcommunism for the minds and hearts of the Arab masses. Arab nationfactors in defining the extent to which Arab activity will compete with in which the Arab nationalists find themselves are the determining tween the two is inevitable, the circumstances and prevailing conditions ence with communism and, therefore, a state of positive rivalry be-Although Arab nationalism cannot accept internal political coexist-than antagonistic confrontation was thought to be more advisable and a surer way to success. The determination of colonialism to maintain its hold on Arab society is, therefore, a factor that has forced the Arabs to choose a temporary truce with communism and to postpoom their positive rivalry with it. In instances where Arab policies do coincide with those of the Communists, it would be ridiculous to assume a hostile attitude toward communism and to refuse to benefit from the opportunity.

nationalists, on the other hand, are derived primarily from the do reflection of Communist foreign policy. The foreign policies of the Ara munist domestic policies in the Arab world have always been a men and interests of the Soviet Union and her conflict with the West. Com practically every other country, evolve from the foreign policy formu lated by the Communist International and stem from the condition a manner that the interests of the Soviet Union are always uppermost have been ignoring and belittling these aspirations. They have been ciety in freedom and in unity. The Arab Communists, on the other hand realize their potentialities, and to achieve a dynamic, progressive so mestic needs of Arab society. Arab nationalist policies evolve first an viewing them on the external and the international scene; and in such from within. They are motivated by the determination of the Arabs to based on the goals of realizing the resurrection of the Arab nation foremost from the Arab revolutionary spirit and ideology and an The policies of the Communist parties in the Arab countries, as in speaks the Arabic language. As such, the Communist Party is a rive ities of an integral part of the Arab intelligentsia. It is a party that within the rank and file of the Arab people. It monopolizes the active It has its structure within the Arab nation. It attracts members from munist Party is an organization operating within the Arab homeland something other than mere advocates of Russia's policies. The Com that particular perspective, in the eyes of the Arabs they represen interests of the Soviet Union and view Arab national problems from spite of the fact that the Communists in the Arab world work for the to differentiate between local communism and the Soviet Union. In with the Communists, therefore, cannot be limited to policies alone phies, but also through its organizational appeal. The Arabs' struggl to the nationalist movement not only in its ideologies and philose coincide. As a matter of fact, the danger increases whenever Com It should not and could not stop, even if the policies of the two de In defining the Arab political stand on communism, it is imperative munist policies and those of the nationalists become similar, due to the confusion of identity that the Communists are capable of exploiting.

Main a more widely spread prestige. of whose interests they serve. The Soviet Union, in spite of being a munist Party. In fact, we have seen more than one occasion on which not limited to, nor always dependent upon, the support of the Comoldering its national interests, self-preservation, the maintenance of Communist parties, remained a state operating realistically and con-Soviet Union during the Second World War is a clear cut indication with Arab aspirations and goals, and catering to the interests of the Russia sacrificed local Communists within a certain country in order to the international situation. This realistic interest of the Soviet Union influence, and the enhancement of its prestige within the scope of Communist state, leading, guiding, and sometimes dominating the hoviet Union. Their vacillation based on the changing stands of the Communists were primarily spreading slogans that had little to do pled with the struggle for independence from Western domination, the been satisfactory or acceptable. When the nationalists were pre-occu-The record of the Communist parties in the Arab world has not Communism has failed to leave a substantial impact on Arab society, even though it has been operating therein for almost forty years. This failure is due to certain elements of strength that are an integral part of the Arab personality. The average Arab is basically putitualistic and religious; communism to him is atheism and materialism. He is highly individualistic; communism is regimentationism. He is nationalistic; communism with its avowed aim of world domination is internationalistic. The Arab intelligentsia views communism an alien ideology born in the West as a result of clashing nationalistics and conducive socio-economic conditions. For the Arabs to thoose between their own way of life, their heritage, their spiritual, metaphysical, religious values and their mission on the one hand, and communism with all its social, economic and political manifestations on the other hand, is not difficult. The Arabs, no doubt, will choose their own way of life.

Unfortunately, the choice is not as simple as that. Other factors do inter into the picture. Of these factors, the experiences that the Arabs have with the West play an important role. The Arab world is keenly conscious politically. For sure, it is not satisfied politically with the West. Grievances, real or imagined, do exist. The average Arab can draw up a long list of promises that were unilaterally withdrawn, of pledges that were arbitrarily revoked, of hostilities and divisions encouraged among groups and states, of corrupt regimes established and maintained against the interests of the people, of alliances and pactoriganized and sponsored, of military occupation and suffering, of threats and armed aggression, and of many opportunities missed, when badly needed help and aid were simply withheld and denied.

The Soviet Union on the other hand, without such a record, was able to capitalize on these mistakes to enhance her prestige in the Middle East. There are many factors which were responsible for the enhancement of Russian prestige in this area. Among them is the role that the West played in the creation of the state of Israel. Though the Soviet Union supported the partition of Palestine in 1947, it became apparent that it did so to create muddy waters in the Middle East.

sion against Egypt in the fall of 1956. Needless to say, that venture enhanced Russian prestige in the Middle East was the tripartite aggres lationary chain that was imposed upon them. A fourth factor which troopers in Jordan. was the landing of United States marines in Lebanon and British para proved to be detrimental to Western interests in the area. A fifth factor sponsored by the West. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, helped certain Arab states when they refused to enter into pacts and alliances such support. The Arabs feel that the West supports freedom movethose Arab countries in their attempt to break away from this isomajority of the Arabs who view the struggle for freedom as indivisible members is the aggressor. This behavior is bewildering to the vast ments when Russia is the aggressor, and shys away when one of its to the attention of the councils of nations, saw fit to shy away from the economic sanctions that were explicitly or implicitly imposed upon A third factor which enhanced Russian prestige in the Middle East is including the United States, whenever these questions were brought up liberation movements of Arab North Africa from French rule. The West prestige. Still another factor is the support that Russia gave for the that Russia capitalized upon in dealings with the Arabs to enhance support of Israel above and beyond the call of duty is another factor vorable toward the Arab viewpoint than that of the West. Western In the early fifties, the Soviet Union adopted a position more fa

Should the West despair and lose hope in cooperating with the Arabs? It is my conviction that a reservoir of good will toward the West still exists in the Arab world. Ideologically, socially, culturally, and economically, the Arab world is far closer to the West than it is to the Soviet Union. There is no affinity whatsoever between the Arab way of life and communism.

are stretched out for Western friendship and cooperation. can be achieved. As far as the Arab people are concerned, our hands aggressive movement, as a dynamic and not a reactionary movement end to the artificial fragmentation that was super-imposed upon it by whether it is Eastern or Western, a nation that is determined to put an determined to achieve complete emancipation from foreign domination, with a different Arab nation, a revolutionary and dynamic nation, understanding between the Arab people and the peoples of the West rapprochement based on mutual respect, mutual interests, and mutual free from the vested interests of a small pressure group, I believe that Once the West pursues a policy independent from colonial designs and The West should view Arab nationalism as a progressive and not an tenets is the real barrier to Communist penetration in the Middle East. Arab nationalism is here to stay, and that the crystallization of its Illiteracy, and low standards of living. The West should realize that the outside world, a nation that is determined to eradicate poverty, The West has to take the initiative and realize that it is dealing indirectly, a commanding event in our lives and we are too deeply we may try to eliminate their influence. unavoidably, find their way into the discussion, no matter how hard undetectable bias in our sources, subjective elements may, perhaps thusiasm or hostility it has evoked. Due to a failing on our part or an involved in its consequences to be altogether unaffected by the enachieve detachment. The Communist Revolution is to-day, directly or One of the serious problems in a study of this nature is how to attempt at generalization. one Arab country to another increases the dangers inherent in any social and economic relationships within which this movement has not only of the Arab Communist movement but also of the complex of been taking place. Moreover, the wide divergence in conditions from Another difficulty relates to the immense gaps in our knowledge of Iraq. In this report I cannot go beyond the early formative years of only on the Communists of the Arab Fertile Crescent and, in particular The survey that follows can, therefore, only be regarded as tentative and continuous exposition. My research has also not been exhaustive terials are scattered and do not lend themselves easily to an orderly their history. The period, as is known, is an obscure one and the ma-Personally, I feel that I can speak with some degree of confidence government. His files were of great value in view of his connection teen-twenties and later acted as a "technical advisor" of the Iraq officially the Deputy Inspector General of the Iraqi Police in the nine and the French "Service de la Sûreté Générale" in Syria and Lebanon British "C.I.D." ("Criminal Investigation Department") in Palestine with Scotland Yard, with the British "Special Branch" in Persia, the plements to the Abstracts of Intelligence referring to the period of the and records of the various central and local committees of the Iraqi "mandate"; and 4) the files of Major J. F. Wilkins. The latter was British secret Intelligence Reports, Abstracts of Intelligence, and Sup-Communist Party that were seized in the period 1946-1955; 3) the files of the Iraqi police on the Communist movement; 2) the papers Security Library of the Ministry of Interior of Iraq, such as: 1) the My sources include, in part, materials that I found in the Internal

Some Preliminary Observations on the Beginnings of Communism in the Arab East

How Tendencies of a Levelling Nature Existed in the Arab East Prior to the Outbreak of the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia

of the writers also believed that religion sowed hatred and dissension eastern Arab lands revelled briefly in unhindered freedom, unfamilbrotherhood. Characteristic of the new spirit was this advice by a verities and that all the people should, therefore, join in a common among the people.2 Others thought that all religions shared the same domination that the intelligentsia sought to emancipate itself. Some material life of their parishioners.* It was apparently from this clerical mous landholdings and ruled like autocrats over the intellectual and were firmly entrenched in the society, and the priests controlled enorin that country was broadly religious. The churches, in consequence, Christian poet to his brother Moslem: priests by a number of Christian men of letters. The framework of life they took the expression of a vehement attack on the authority of the iar feelings and inclinations came to the surface in Lebanon. In part tion, when after long years of relentless suppression public opinion in the In the immediate months following the 1908 Young Turk Revolu-

And come and speak to me of essential matters Leave my priest and your shaikh in their disputations, all authority but also of all differences between men and classes. "They have no use," he tells us, "for the saiyid or the amir, * the learned who "exceeded all bounds" and demanded the abolition not only of erences to "certain poets"4 and "some seditious and riotous persons"5 Sheikho, an influential spokesman of the clerical class, there are refof the over-sensitive priesthood. In the contemporary writings of Louis coloring. We know of their presence only indirectly from the reaction These sentiments were accompanied by inclinations of a more radical and XIIth Year Number 2 of February 1909, p. 96. ¹ See Al-Mashrik (Beirut) XIth Year Number 10 of October 1908, pp. 792-793

had managed in the course of the nineteenth century to attract to themselves much of the power of the old feudal leaders. Our remarks are particularly applicable to the priests of the Maronites who form the majority of Christians in Lebanon * What largely contributed to this development was the fact that the priests ² Ibid., p. 96.

^{} In this context the title shaikh refers to men of religior

⁴ Ibid., pp. 94-95.
5 Al-Mashrik XIth Year Number 11 of November 1908, p. 866.

who were or were recognized to be descendants of the Prophet Muhammad
* An amir is a chief or prince.  Saiyid: a title which at that time was applied more particularly to persons natural and moral laws," he affirmed.8 "How can the imam," the priest, or the wealthy."6 "They allege that all people have the same right in and the bishop be put on the same level as the vulgar and market peo property, wealth, noble rank, and authority."7 This is against "all the of God and man has no right to complain of his lot, for God's answer ple?"9 All individual and social differences are, he claimed, the work made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou to him would be: "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against (Romans 9: 20-21).10 lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor?'

given it by its adversaries as Al-Hizb Al-Hurr Al-Ladini ("The Anti-Ahrar ("The Association of Liberals"), better known by the name tion in Beirut in 1928 and in Basrah in 1929 of the Jam'iyyat Al the Lebanese paper Ash-Shams ("The Sun") and inspired the formawere in a sense the progenitors of that movement that grew around zation formed by Arab Communists in the East.12 Religious Liberal Party"),11 which was the first open political organi The inclinations, against which were thus arrayed God and Bible ideas in Lebanon in 1908? In all probability their source was the its origin to the initiative of a few Armenian students who began Ottoman cities and particularly in Constantinople. The Hentchak owed tionaries that was active at this time in the underground in various "Hentchak" ("The Bell"),13 a movement of young Armenian revolunineteen-hundreds it identified itself as a "social democratic" organiaim was the unification of all Armenians in one socialist state. In the zation and cooperated closely with the Bolsheviks in the Caucasu publishing a paper by that name in Geneva in 1887. Its long-range What, one may wonder, accounted for the existence of levelling > soon came to a halt. After holding in 1914 a secret congress, which ocratic Hentchakian," and in the following year started publishing in 1910 formed their own auxiliary "Student Union of the Social Demand Arsen Kitour. Students were preponderant in the organization and members were Sarkis Haykouni, Hayk Ohanessian, Khoren Sarkissian, menian Revolutionary Federation). Among the more militant of its against the more nationalistically-inclined "Dashnagtzoutian" (the Arsociety was discovered by the Turkish police. Many of its members was attended by 56 delegates from the various Ottoman provinces, the the Gaidz ("The Spark").14 The activities of the Hentchak, however, were charged with plotting to murder Enver Pasha, then Turkey's Minwere arrested and twenty of them suffered death by hanging. They neck allegedly by escaping prison¹⁶ and was fated, as we shall see, to have a hand in the nineteen-twenties in the rise of communism in ister of War.15 However, one of the leaders, Arsen Kitour, saved his

How Communism Was Early Associated with Islam and How this Was to Incline Minds Favorably Toward Communism

a native of Aleppo and an eminent Moslem revivalist. In his Tabai racial and religious minorities. There are definite traces of their inin Ottoman days levelling ideas appealed only to intellectuals of the among men," had created among Muslims "the conditions of a Comfluence in the thought of 'Abd-ur-Rahman Al-Kawakibi (1848-1902), nursed by the same mother."19 munist18 existence that can hardly be found even among brothers... the Orthodox Caliphs, "the like of which history has never reproduced the length of asserting that the seventh century Islamic government of Al-Istibdad (The Attributes of Tyranny), Al-Kawakibi went even to It would be hasty to conclude from the preceding observations that doubtedly his was the first note in modern Arabic literature on behalf town he was known as Abu-d-Du'afa - the Father of the Weak. Un-Al-Kawakibi had great sympathy for the common people. In his home From such accounts of his life as are available, it is apparent that to Ibid., p. 867.

* Imam is a term which in Sunni Muslim usage applies to both the Caliph and the leader of the congregational prayer.

Al-Mashrik of February 1909, p. 95.
 Al-Mashrik XIth Year Number 11 of November 1908, p. 866.

4.8

^{14 &}quot;The Spark" (Iskra) was the name of the organ of the Bolshevik Party till British intelligence records. Source: Wilkins' File No 1158 1904.

15 This detail is not mentioned in Arsen Kitour's letter but is taken from

This is according to Kitour's own version.

See below, pp. 60-61 and 63.

¹⁸ Ishtirakiyyah—which then was the term for "Communist" and not for "Socialist" as at present. The word for "Socialist" at that time was "ijtima'iyyah." 19 Tabai' Al-Istibdad, Al-Ma'arif Press, Cairo, 1900 (?), p. 25.

⁹ Ibid., p. 869.

Source: Iraqi Police Dossier entitled "Al-Hizb Al-Hurr Al-Ladini."

See also below, pp. 60 and 67-69.

¹³ The information that follows is largely based on a letter dated June 14, 1937, written by Arsen Kitour, a member of the Hentchak, to an Armenian student group at the American University of Beirut. The letter was intercepted and is in Major Wilkins' File No 1158 entitled "Arsen Kitour."

grovelling self-abasement before despotic power.21 These sentiments ed at the capricious tyranny of the Ottoman sultans and laid bare striking in an age of complacent fatalism is his mood of rebellion divine dogmas.20 He poured scorn on the notables-in their generality turning religion into a field for gain and exalting superstitions into "official" 'ulama* for cultivating pretence and neglecting virtue, for the moral decadence it brought in its wake. He bitterly assailed the of the yet silent, sunken masses of society. What is perhaps more the many in the wasted abundance of the few. Hardly more palatable was his appeal if only for a modest share for were obviously not calculated to endear him to the "pillars" of society Indeed in his pages he spared none of the established powers. He lash--for their conceit and their waste of life, and even more for their wrote Al-Kawakibi around 1900, "Human beings share the hardships of life in an unjust way," number does not exceed one per cent-enjoy half or more of what for men of politics and religion and their hangers-on-and their congeals from the blood of humanity, and squander it in self-indul requires other than that inequality, and humaneness imposes that the elevated should take the lowly by his hand and bring him close to avaricious merchants and the monopolists and the like of this class, active and enterprising with the indolent and the sluggard, but justice acquisition of useful knowledge with the drowsy ignoramus or the a question of equating the scholar who spends a lifetime in the his rank and his mode of life.23 tens, or hundreds, or thousands of workers and peasants . . . It is not and they number also around one per cent, live each of them as live Those who trade in precious and luxurious commodities and the tyranny that is guarded by the citadels of political tyranny?"24 Whence this inequality that Al-Kawakibi so abhorred, this "social same species do not eat one another but man devours man."25 It is this "It is the natural order among animals . . . that the members of the > perverting. immoderate wealth does not only foster tyranny but is also morally Finally, accumulation should not be much in excess of needs because land, which God has created for the enjoyment of all his creatures..."32 the seizure of what is public as, for example, the appropriation of the by the "monopoly of necessities or the oppression of weak laborers or lation should not involve any encroachment on the needs of others as formed, or if they are from the bounty of nature. Secondly, accumuacquired by exchange, or against surety, or in return for labor perconditions.31 First, it must be lawful, that is, things should only be mulation of capital is, consequently, not permissible except under three enly laws and political and ethical wisdom banned usury."30 The accuto "preserve equality among men in regard to money power," "heavand independence of weaker nations."28 For this reason29 and in order masters and external tyranny by facilitating aggression on the freedom "strengthens internal tyranny by dividing the people into slaves and history. On the other hand, the building of great individual fortunes the whole problem. From it arises political tyranny which in turn leads "injustice that dwelleth in the instinct of man"26 that is the root of to extreme economic inequality.27 This apparently is the sequence of quieu's Esprit des lois. cilable elements-his main indebtedness appears to have been to Vitas a whole-which incidentally included varied and not always recontorio Alfieri da Asti's Della Tirannide34 and ultimately to de Monteschange could best be effected through a growth in the consciousness of ence for gradualism. He thus frowned on the use of force and held that strongly ethical direction of his thought blended with a marked preferthe early nineteenth century. Otherwise and in regard to his thought that his ideas had partly their source in the pre-Marxian socialism of the community which education alone could induce. 33 All this indicates principles rather than on a scientific or historical necessity. Besides, the the income of the community rested on rational and, primarily, ethical Obviously Al-Kawakibi's appeal for a more equitable division of

²⁶ Ibid., p. 70.

²⁷ Ibid., p. 72. ²⁸ Ibid., p. 79.

³⁰ Ibid., p. 78. 29 Ibid., p. 79.

³¹ Ibid., pp. 76–8. ³² Ibid., p. 76. 33

See, for example, ibid., p. 173.

quieu, belonged to the noble class. 34 Affieri (1749-1803) was an Italian writer and playwright and, like Montes-

^{*} The 'ulama are canonists or theologians.

inal undated edition), pp. 23-33. 20 For his attack on the 'ulama see his Umm Al-Kura (The Mother-city), (Orig

²¹ See Tabai' Al-Istibdad, pp. 55-58.

²² Ibid., p. 71.

²⁸ Ibid., p. 72.

²⁴ Ibid., p. 70. 25 Ibid., p. 68. Ibid., p. 68.

It is time now to point out that Al-Kawakibi belonged to the class of the ashraf. Membership in this class was essentially a matter of birth and was hereditary. The sanction for it was the religion of the people. The ashraf (plural of sharif), also known as sadah (plural of saiyid), were or claimed to be of the Prophet's blood. Their social position was built on that premise. Convenient traditions even sought to dignify their rights and their privileges, their virtues and their vices by the impress of divine calculation.

The question that immediately arises is how a member of Islam's highest class—the Aleppo nakibs or marshals of the ashraf were for long drawn from Al-Kawakibi's family—became susceptible to more or less "unsettling" ideas.

It is perhaps worthy of notice that in the second half of the nine-teenth century and early decades of the twentieth many of the standard-bearers of dissent, rebellion, or revival in the Arab provinces of the Ottoman Empire were from the ashraf class. Jamal-ud-Din Al-Afghani⁸⁵ who excited in almost all the lands of Islam a spirit of Pan-Muslim reform, Rashid Rida who led the Salafiyyah movement, Shukri Al-Alusi who appealed for the purification of the faith, Talib An-Nakib who stirred up nationalist feelings against the Turks in Iraq in the days before the First World War, Husain of the Hashemites who launched the Arab Revolt of 1916—all were ashraf. Was there, one wonders, any inherent unity beneath the outward diversity of all these exertions? Wherein, in other words, lay the roots of this restlessness of Islam's nobility?

The historical behavior of individuals or of classes seldom proceeds from a single cause and we would be the last to question that multiple and complex factors actuated the ashraf. Here, however, only a general and incomplete explanation would be provided in the hope that it may add perspective to Al-Kawakibi's rebellious temper.³⁷

In the early nineteenth century the ashraf carried great weight in that conglomeration of all but nominally independent principalities that was the Ottoman Empire. Their influence, to be sure, differed was called the nakib. Besides, some of the important awkaf (endowauthority and the poor communications, the more powerful of the mustathna, i. e., exempt from the financial control of the government. ments), which were in the care of leading ashraf, appear to have been Pasha but to a member of their own family who, as already noted, amongst others that of being subject in each city not to the ruling to be drawn from the ashraf. The latter also enjoyed various privileges, then obviously one of the more socially meaningful aptitudes-tended Sunni 'ulama-and the knowledge of the Muslim law and religion was up as a Caliph. But in at least some of the Arab cities the upper nent political positions lest one of them should fancy to set himself them and, where they had their say, avoided placing them in promiephemeral. Understandably the Turkish sovereigns kept an eye on religious roots was as continuous as the power of the local Pashas was landed ashraf ruled over their estates almost in undisputed sovereignty. No less significant was the fact that, by virtue of the dispersal of from city to city according to local conditions but in view of its deep of its nakibs was almost destroyed. It is not without interest that in power.38 The worst turn for them came in the reign of Sultan 'Abd-ulof the major cities, although in quite a few regions Ottoman authority sensitive part of their private interest, particularly in the reign of nothing could have distressed them more than the attack on the most however the ashraf might have felt about the decline of their nikabalis, port of his appeal for setting up a Kuraishi* Arab as Caliph. 89 But his Umm Al-Kura, Al-Kawakibi adduced this as an argument in sup-Majid (1839-1861) when the class fell out of grace and the influence continued to be no more than a fiction. At any rate, the ashraf found "Intendants" -- who soon succeeded in establishing themselves in most ments of the new policy were the Walis-the Ottoman version of the munications, the Ottoman sultans began attracting to themselves all inordinate desires of Europe and taking advantage of the new comthemselves being slowly and gradually edged out of their former families, tribal shaikhs, and privileged corporate orders. The instruthe elements of power hitherto diffused among a crowd of landed involved in a new and rather unrelenting process. Impelled by the As the century advanced, however, the ashraf became increasingly ³⁵ Al-Afghani was by origin from non-Ottoman Afghanistan but had great not impact on the Muslim intelligentsia in the Ottoman lands.

³⁶ The Salafiyyah was in essence a traditionalist movement but it turned its back on the existing Islam in which it could only see ugliness and degeneracy and drew its inspiration from the Islam of the Salaf, "the Ancestors," i.e., the Prophet and the Orthodox Caliphs. Rashid Rida also figured prominently in the drive for Arab autonomy within the Ottoman Empire.

 $^{^{37}}$ The following few paragraphs are in effect a summary of an independent study I made of the ashraf class.

³⁸ In non-Ottoman Afghanistan a somewhat similar fate overtook Jamal-ud-Din Al-Afghani's family whose members ruled as sovereigns over the lands of Kinir until about the middle of the nineteenth century.

^{*} Kuraish is the tribe to which the Prophet belonged.

³⁹ See Umm Al-Kura, pp. 137-138.

Sultan 'Abd-ul-Hamid (1876—1909). The latter instituted a regular policy of impoverishing the landed class. He distinguished himself by the facility with which he converted choice estates into his personal property without ever paying for them. This perhaps at bottom is not a very peculiar habit but then with him it reached such proportions that by the end of the nineteenth century some 30 per cent of the best cultivated lands in the wilayahs of Baghdad and Basrah and considerable areas in other provinces had become the private property of the Turkish crown.⁴⁰

Not all the ashraf were equally affected by these developments, partly because the Sultan's power was not always effective and partly because some ashraf were more able to hold their own than others. Furthermore, what we might call "service-ashraf" and "service-'ulama," i. e. ashraf and 'ulama whose status rested primarily on their services to the sultan, were now much in evidence. It was in fact on the latter and on other upstart notables of the like that Al-Kawakibi vented his wrath. Incidentally, one of these "service-ashraf" succeeded in wresting the Aleppo nikabah from Al-Kawakibi's family.

wrecked upon Charybdis however, Arab "nationalism" in its incipient form proved to be the motives, they were, of course, unable to react in unison. Eventually, shored up their privileged position and their social dominance. Hence old modes of thought, indeed the very Islamic fabric that had hitherto only a few years after the death of Al-Kawakibi. Much to the horror it became obvious that the ashraf had only escaped Scylla to be institutions that they symbolized gained a new lease of life. But a Under a nationalist outer covering, the ashraf and the worn-out social palladium of their class-the last dyke of the old order, so to say the greater intensity of their resistance. Too divided in their individual but seemed also intent on demolishing the old social conceptions, the of the ashraf, the Revolution did not only radicalize past processes Arab nationalism gathered force and assumed forms truer to its nature was to reach its culmination in the 1908 Young Turk Revolution-The trend just described, i. e. the advance of centralized power

Enough has been said of the general circumstances which gave rise to Tabai' Al-Istibdad and Umm Al-Kura to leave no doubt that in these works Al-Kawakibi was not attacking an old situation but a 41 Abu-I-Huda As-Sayyadi, then a well-known agent and confidant of Sultan 'Abd-ul-Hamid but apparently a saiyid of questionable lineage.

40 These lands were known as saniyyah lands.

new development. His heart was truly with the old society. But he could not afford to ignore the decay that had overtaken it. He, therefore, sought refuge—like the romantic Salafiyyah—in the more distant past and came to insist that the community could be saved if only it trusted to the Islamic tradition in its original Arab purity. However, he himself was not entirely faithful to that tradition, for in his cagerness to idealize it he attributed to it a number of concepts alien in origin and character. That in doing this he should have partly drawn on Montesquieu is quite natural. His problem after all was not without analogy to that of the French monarchs of the eighteenth century and was at pains to discover the means of restoring traditional aristocratic liberties. Al-Kawakibi's other graftings upon the Islamic tradition are more reminiscent of the not very happy attempts of certain parsons of the nineteenth century to give Christianity a Communist tinge.

and others are striving for," were realized by early Islam44 which alleged to have been built on two foundations: "a democratic adminisof inequality and tyranny lay in a return to the principles of the nership" of early Muslims, he leaves us also in doubt as to whether to seize upon it as an evidence of the "equality" and "common partineffectual zakat-a 2.5 per cent poor tax-as a levelling force and of the early Islamic society. And when he proceeds to regard the kharaj.46 This reveals how superficial was Al-Kawakibi's knowledge "the generality of the nation," and its fruits were enjoyed by those brought into the world "a life of common partnership."45 Most of the living conditions . . that the Communists, the Nihilists, the Socialists, to the economic order, "the equality or nearness in rights and in tration"42 and "an aristocratic shura," i.e. advice by the nobles.43 As Islamic society of the Orthodox Caliphs. Politically, that society is he had understood at all the economic "egalitarianism" that had won laboring on it subject only to the payment of the 'ushr and the land in the first two centuries of Islam was, we are told, owned by Thus to Al-Kawakibi the ideal solution for the prevailing state

⁴² Nowhere in his treatises does Al-Kawakibi elaborate upon this.

⁴³ Tabai' Al-Istibdad, p. 27.

⁴⁴ Umm Al-Kura, p. 35, and Tabai' As-Istibdad, pp. 74-75

I.

tax paid on landed property.

⁵⁴

ul-Balshaftyyah ("The Principles of Bolshevism") (1920).48 The theme and communism was, for example, the theme of Muhammad Barkat 1937, he rose in the Iraqi House of Deputies and declared: chief Shi'ah Mujtahid50 of his day.51 The popular Iraqi poet Ma'rul ul-'Ulum, one of the 'ulama of the Holy City of Najaf, 49 and by Mirza was also affirmed in the nineteen-twenties by Muhammad 'Ali Bahr ullah's Bolshevism and Islam (1919)47 and of the anonymous Mabadi' facilitate the acceptance of Communist ideas. The conformity of Islam decades this association became more frequent and was in time to so interpreted and that Islam was associated with communism, even egalitarian interpretation or not; the relevant point is that it has been wise, or whether the Muslim economic tradition lends itself to an Kawakibi understood early Islam and "egalitarian" doctrines or other Ar-Rasafi was in effect but echoing Al-Kawakibi when on June 7 Muhammad Rida, son of Mirza Muhammad Taki Ash-Shirazi, the if the association was more verbal than conceptual. In subsequent But from our point of view what matters is not whether Al

I am a Communist... but my Communism is Islamic for it is written in the Sacred Book: "And in their wealth there is a right for the beggar and the deprived." ... And it was the Prophet that said: "Take it from their wealthy and return it to their poor." Was this not Communism? Who would then, but out of ignorance, resist this principle?⁵²

Again the relevant point is not the depth of Ma'ruf Ar-Rasafi's knowledge of Islam or of communism.

How the Comintern Took a Direct Hand in Creating the First Communist Cells in the Arab East

We have seen how levelling tendencies existed in the Arab East quite independently of any Bolshevik influence. However, organized Arab communism began on the initiative of the Comintern.

Until the middle nineteen-twenties the only active Communist organization in the eastern Arab countries was the Palestine Communist Party. Its position at that time was thus described by its chairman, Haim Auerbach, at a secret meeting of the Central Committee of the Party held in Tel-Aviv on March 8, 1927:

We were the only Communist front in the Arab Orient and in the absence of anybody else we had to pay attention to every question. All the duties in relation to the revolution fell on our shoulders. We had to look into matters relating to Syria, Egypt, and Islamic congresses in Cairo, Mecca, and elsewhere. Our comrades realized the great scope of work, but the International thought that our demands were immoderate... We were not glad of our relations with the International; no replies were regularly made to our letters, no decisions were regularly passed in regard to the matters affecting us and we used to receive very small assistance... The result was that we were a small party that was burdened with great duties but was deprived of all means necessary for their performance.⁵³

The Palestine Party in those days was also handicapped by the almost complete absence of Arabs from its midst. "I should not forget to mention," Auerbach told his Central Committee at the meeting in question, the main evil with which our Party was afflicted, namely, that we were composed of a few Jewish persons. It is true that the Party progressed a good deal afterwards and comprised Arab members but it has been a very slow progress. Neither the Third International nor we ourselves are pleased with the results. Everytime we think of executing something, we behold the great necessity of the presence amongst us of a great number of Arabs. This is the Third International's opinion of our real position.

According to Auerbach, the Communist International first took serious interest in the Arab East in December 1926. Arab problems were then discussed "from all points of view" at a meeting which he attended and which was held in Moscow by the Secretariat on Oriental Affairs of the Executive Committee of the International. The consensus of the Secretariat was that the Palestine Party should make greater effort to establish ties with the Arab nationalist movement in Palestine and to create in its midst "associations to be formed by the people's class." The British and French representatives agreed on behalf of their parties to provide assistance in "money and men"

⁴⁷ This book was in circulation in Baghdad in 1920. Excerpts from it are in (British) Abstract of Intelligence, Vol. 2, No. 5, January 31, 1920. Barkatullah was a famous Indian Pan-Muslim.

⁴⁸ Reference to this book is made in Major Wilkins' File No 283 on Mirza Muhammad Rida.

⁴⁹ Source: Major Wilkins' File No 237 on Muhammad 'Ali Bahr-ul-'Ulum.
⁵⁰ A mujtahid is an authoritative interpreter of the doctrine of the Shi'ah sect
⁵¹ Source: Major Wilkins' File No 283 on Mirza Muhammad Rida.

⁵² From the Proceedings of the Iraqi House of Deputies, Session of June 7, 1937, as reported by Al-Ahali Year 6 Number 606 of June 8, 1937. Compare the statement of Ar-Rasafi with the remarks of Al-Kawakibi in Umm Al-Kura, p. 35.

⁵⁸ The text of Haim Auerbach's report was passed on to the British "C. I. D." by one of its agents in the Palestine Communist Party. Abstract of Intelligence of 1927, paragraph 609, of June 2, 1927, has reference.

to facilitate the tasks of the Palestinian Communists. The Secretarial deemed it necessary to "censure" the latter for their "ambitious demand to monopolize work in contiguous countries" but approved, on their recommendation, the forming of "a Communist centre for the unity of parties in Arab countries." Subsequently, and while Auerbach was still in Moscow, it was also decided to establish two committees to deal with Arab Affairs, one in the Comintern and the other in the Communist Youth International.

It was too clear to the Secretariat on Oriental Affairs that the Communist movement stood little chance of progress in the Arab East as long as its local destinies were in Jewish hands. On its instructions, and with a view to finding a solution for this problem, Pierre Sémard, I. Hochmann, and Elie Teper arrived in Aleppo, Syria, in July 1927. Sémard was in 1925 the chairman of the Politburo of the French Communist Party but at this time only a member of the French Comfédération Générale du Travail. I. Hochmann was a delegate of the Profintern. Teper (alias Max Kogal) was the Russian-born vice-chairman of the Palestine Party. Their meeting-place was the office of a certain Fathi Effendi, editor of the newspaper As-Sabah. The object of their mission was unwittingly explained by Sémard to an agent of British Intelligence who appears to have been highly placed in the Communist movement.

We wish—Sémard told the agent—to establish a centre exclusively for Arabs, for the Palestine Communist Party is still too Jewish in composition and we find that Arabs do not like to be associated with Jews. In northern Syria, however, the population is almost exclusively Arab and Moslem and a properly established centre here would undoubtedly attract the masses. Furthermore, Aleppo is near the Turkish frontier, which would not only facilitate the visits of emissaries to Syria and make communications in general much easier than at present but would also give our comrades a better chance of escaping when danger threatens them in Syria.

Subsequently, at a secret conference of the Palestine Party held in Jerusalem on September 10, 1927, Elie Teper gave a long explanation of the policy of the Secretariat on Oriental Affairs. He said that the Communist leadership contemplated creating, in addition to the Aleppo center, a number of sub-centers in other Syrian cities. The headquarters for Syria was to be shifted to Homs if necessary.

Wilkins and File No 1831 on Elie Teper.

55 I. e. the Red International of Trade Unions.

Aleppo was to be under the direction of a Jaffa executive, but subcenters in Syria and Palestine were to report regularly to Aleppo and Jaffa respectively, in order to avoid overlapping and congestion of work. A general meeting of delegates was to be held at each of these main centers once a month, in order to discuss the ways and means of developing their work. The main centers and sub-centers were to be free to draw up their own bylaws within the radius of the general laws of the Third International. Teper also indicated that facilities had been given for sending promising Arab students from Palestine and Syria to the Communist schools which had been opened at Toulon and Cherbourg for the training of young Communists. As to the tasks of the new—and the old—Communist centers, Teper revealed that the Comintern's Oriental Secretariat had laid special emphasis upon the need of encouraging all movements, even those of feudal Amirs or tribal Shaikhs, that tended to weaken British and French colonialism.

The Aleppo center early received a set-back, the French police having arrested one Dorinovich, a liaison between the center and the Jaffa executive. Dorinovich was replaced by a certain Nessim Romanov who, however, came quickly under surveillance. Harassed by the police, the center was unable to achieve much progress. More successful in the long run was a new Communist group that appeared in Beirut in 1928 and that clustered around the paper Ash-Shams ("The Sun") and took on the name of "Al-Ahrar" ("The Liberals"). How this group came into being and who were its members remain to be investigated. Our knowledge of it is derived from the documentation we have on its Iraqi counterpart which was formed in Basrah in 1929. We have something to say in reference to its objectives but it is appropriate that we should first attempt to trace the beginnings of communism in Iraq. 1971.

We have had occasion to catch a glimpse of the fortunes of Arsen Kitour in the days before the First World War⁵⁸ but, as we said, there was in Iraq a sequel to his story. Sometime before the discovery of his connection with the underground Hentchak, Kitour received an appointment to teach history and geography at the Government Sul-

Beirut Public Library. Unfortunately, when I was last in the Arab East, Lebanon was in the throes of a civil war and the library was closed.

⁵⁷ I should state here that I have thus far been unable to give very careful consideration to the considerable material I have on Iraqi communism. The sketchy account that follows must, therefore, be regarded as tentative.

⁵⁸ See above, pp. 49-50.

taniyyah School in Baghdad.⁵⁹ In one of his classes in 1914 sat a boy, eleven years of age, whose life was destined—if our interpretation of certain events of the nineteen-twenties is correct—to cross again with that of his teacher in circumstances of greater moment. The boy grew, according to Iraqis who are in a position to know, into one of the more brilliant intellectuals of contemporary Iraq. I have heard him called "the Iraqi Kasim Amin," although he never had the perseverance of the Egyptian feminist. One thing, however, is not open to dispute: he was the first of the Marxists of Iraq. His name was Husain Ar-Rahhal.

Ar-Rahhal's family originally belonged to the class of the chalabis, who in the Iraq of the nineteenth century were merchants of affluence and high social standing. The chalabis were apparently accepted by the landed ashraf as their equal for there were frequent intermarriages between the two classes. Even as late as 1958 the title "chalabi" had still its fascination for the big merchants of Iraq for to their employees and laborers they were only known as "chalabis" and were always thus addressed.

and progressed to senior commands in the Turkish artillery. His milion Iraqi waters. Ar-Rahhal's father entered the Turkish officer corps and with India. Subsequently, however, it lost its wealth partly beof sailing ships and traded on the Iraqi rivers and in the Persian Gulf a German high school in Berlin. He was still in the German capital tary duties took him to many places in Iraq and throughout the Ota storm at sea, and partly because of the advent of British steamers cause many of its ships, which then travelled in fleets, perished in about. He was told that the workers wanted to set up a government recalls turning to someone at the time and asking what it was all making comparisons between their condition and that of the advanced years of the First World War took him to Europe he could not help to observe at close range how his people lived and when the closing toman Empire. His son always accompanied him and had a chance probably accounted for the increasing interest he now took in what was much discussion of the event in the following weeks and this some of the participants in the uprising were his schoolmates there of their own and he marvelled at so strange a thing. As the sons of threw its barricades up in the streets of the city (January 1919). Hu -in fact in a confectioner's shop-when the Communist Spartakusbund Europeans. The end of the war found young Ar-Rahhal studying in In the nineteenth century the Rahhal family owned a large fleet still young in spirit, exclaimed in the early nineteen-twenties: When the Iraqi poet Jamil Sidki Az-Zahawi, now an old man but many of the things that their elders idealized or took for granted now followed that the disgruntled youth of Iraq began to question what the Shabibah* had been led to expect. It was in the years that ness. A fancied freedom-the form without the substance-was not early victories of the revolt quickly gave way to depression and bitterindelible mark on the sensibilities of many an Iraqi. Elation at the sions by the invader, the episodes of devotion and sacrifice-left their the tumultuous overflow of feelings, the fearful tensions, the represthe Iraqi cauldron was boiling over. The conflicts that then raged Arab patrimony was everywhere being torn asunder. In a few months of Calamity-'Am An-Nakbah-when Syria fell to the French and the in the throes of restlessness and anxiety. This was 1920, the Year ever, he was back in his native Baghdad, only to find his countrymen the socialist paper Die Freiheit ("Freedom") had to say. Soon, how-

I am bored with everything old I have known in my life. If you have something new, let us have it, or when in a verse addressed to the eleventh century Arab poetphilosopher Abu-l-'Ala' Al-Ma'arri he said:

What I admire most in you Is your mockery of tradition and your rebellion, or when exhorting Iraqis:

Rise in violent anger against old usages Rise even against Providence,⁶⁰

he was expressing more than the oddities of a temperamental poet. His mood was the mood of many of the Shabibah. Young Ar-Rahhal was part of this atmosphere. He contributed to it—surely more than many others—but he also breathed from it and it had inevitably its effect on the direction of his thought.

But let us retrace our steps to the year after the Iraqi uprising. In the course of that year, i. e. in 1921, Ar-Rahhal left Iraq by way of Basrah, having persuaded his parents to send him back to Europe with a view to resuming his studies. His ship called at Karachi on the way and there for some reason Ar-Rahhal left it and was to stay in India for upwards of a year. What he did in that country besides learning English is not clear. In an interview I had with him

⁵⁹ Source: Major Wilkins' File No 1158 on Arsen Kitour.

^{*} A term then often applied to the youth educated in the modern schools.

60 From Az-Zahawi's Fifth Collection of Poems entitled Ad-Diwan Al-Khamis:

Al-Awshal (Baghdad Press, Baghdad), pp. 20 and 66.

Ahmad As-Sayyid,61 and which in part is based upon the experience of of a personal nature." In Jalal Khalid,* a novel written by Mahmud he stated in passing that he was detained there by "considerations Ar-Rahhal, there are repeated references to the hero's communion in after his return to Baghdad Ar-Rahhal took to reading The Labour India with a revolutionary Indian journalist. 62 At any rate, shortly Monthly which was then published by Palme Dutt, a young intellectual of Indian birth and a member of the Communist Party of Great purchased his copies from there until the authorities deemed fit to ban Britain. Ar-Rahhal explained that he first chanced upon the periodical in Mackenzie's Bookshop-a well-known British firm in Baghdad-and it from Iraq.63 First World War activities. The entry is dated June 14, 1924, and reveals that he met at the Majestic Hotel with Gregory Mikhailovich way of knowing. The latter had by now been won to communism teacher, Arsen Kitour, before or after his trip to India we have no who arrived in Baghdad on June 3 en route for Bushire. Later, in This is borne out by the first entry in his dossier relating to his post-1926, Kitour was to organize a Baghdad branch of HOK-Haistani Laktinov, "a member of the Moscow Extraordinary Commission," cording to British Intelligence records, originally worked for Armenian Ognoothian Kommittee or Helping Armenians Committee-which acindependence but subsequently became a Bolshevik society. Whether Ar-Rahhal's path crossed again with that of his former anonymous revolutionary from India that Husain Ar-Rahhal formed on the suggestion of Arsen Kitour or perhaps the prompting of the Most of the persons who closeted themselves with Ar-Rahhal in in 1924 what in effect was the first "Marxist" study-circle in Iraq. those days in retired and often heated debates in an inner room of Baghdad's Haidarkhanah Mosque would probably not have identified It is not possible to say whether it was on his own initiative or > again briefly in 1927, is enough to reveal their pronouncedly Marxist piece As-Sahifah ("The Journal"), which appeared in 1924-1925 and simply as "jama'ti"-"my circle."But a cursory glance at their mouththemselves as "Marxists" and if asked would have said that theirs orientation. Their conception of Marxism was derived for the most was a circle for the study of "new ideas." Ar-Rahhal referred to them part from The Labour Monthly and from such articles as Ar-Rahhal and the son of the imam of the Haidarkhanah Mosque; Muhammad the circle were Mahmud Ahmad As-Sayyid, the first novelist of Iraq through the Mackenzie Bookshop. Among the principal members of munist Party. It is also known that Ar-Rahhal ordered Das Kapital translated for them from L'Humanité, the organ of the French Com-Salim Fattah, then a student at the School of Law, the son of an a journalist and an official of the Ministry of Education. Ar-Rahhal ex-official of the Ottoman government, and the brother-in-law of Ar-Rahhal; 'Abdallah Jadu', an official of the Directorate of Posts and Telegraphs and the son of a cloth-contractor; and 'Awni Bakr Sidki, was at this time still a student in Baghdad's Law School.

in any Western language were extremely few, it can be readily appreno Communist literature in Arabic and that the Iraqis who could read ciated how singularly fitted to help the cause of communism in Iraq was Husain Ar-Rahhal with his unique command of German, French, English, Turkish, and Arabic. Although his circle did not long endure Communist Party cannot be underestimated. It is enough to mention -by 1927 it had broken up-its importance in the history of the Iraqi When it is realized that in the early nineteen-twenties there was first introduced to Communist thought by Ar-Rahhal.65 1) Zaki Khairi, now one of the leading Communists of Iraq, was Baghdad to unveil, is the sister of Ar-Rahhal. Party in the nineteen-forties and incidentally one of the first women of 2) Aminah Ar-Rahhal, member of the Central Committee of the are cousins of Ar-Rahhal's principal companion, Mahmud Ahmad Asand his brother Yusuf Isma'il, who is also high in Communist ranks munist and the editor of Ittihad-ush-Sha'b ("The Unity of the People"), Sayyid, on his mother's side and 'Abd-ul-Fattah Ibrahim, an outstanding Iraqi Leftist, his cousin on his father's side. 3) 'Abd-ul-Kader Isma'il, perhaps the most influential Iraqi Com-

⁶⁵ I have this from Zaki Khairi himself whom I interviewed in the prison of ^{*} Jalal Khalid is a fictitious name.

⁶¹ For As-Sayyid see below, p. 64.

Jalal Khalid (Baghdad, October 1927), pp. 2, 9-12, and 61.

acquaintance with the contents of his dossier and read to him the entries made therein by the British police noting, as I did so, the comments that he thought state that I obtained first his version of the events and then made known my My interviews with Husain Ar-Rahhal were in April 1958. I should perhaps ⁶⁴ Actually the Extraordinary Commission had by this time given way to the State Political Administration. Among the tasks assigned to this body was the execution of "special" instructions relating to "the protection of the revolutionary extended family in the social life of Iraq of the nineteen-twenties and particularly as a means for the propagation of ideas. Obviously the facts just cited also point to the importance of the

Ar-Rahhal volunteered. "I was," he said, "only an amateur. Besides, movement. Part of the answer may be found in a self-portrait that reason had been given long before by Al-Kawakibi. "Each of us," he Sayyid's autobiographical novel.66 As to why they disagreed, the not agree and thus parted company. We gather this much from Asidle." However, it also appears that the members of the circle could I am more an introvert than an extrovert. In truth, I delight in being I have always been more interested in theory, in main lines ..., and wrote in 1900, "has become a nation in himself."67 It is the malady It may be asked why Ar-Rahhal's circle did not grow into a of the Arabs! grew up and was educated in Tiflis, Georgia, to which city his father circle was formed and whose work in southern Iraq was to lead to Georgian, Assyrian, Persian, Turkish, and Arabic. But what distinhad migrated from 'Amadiyyah in northern Iraq in Ottoman days." distant results: Pyotr or Petros Vasili. Vasili was an Assyrian who to have been active on behalf of communism even before Ar-Rahhal's guished him from Ar-Rahhal and, of course, made all the difference Like Ar-Rahhal, Vasili was skilled in many tongues. He knew Russian, is that he was a professional revolutionary. At this point we must turn our attention to a man who appears did not stay long in any one place. During the decade that ended with dish Sulaimaniyyah, and then again in Iraq's seaport and finally in 'kubah-a centre for the estates of Baghdad's landed families, in Kurhis banishment from Iraq in 1933 he lived in Basrah, Baghdad, Ba-Nasiriyyah, a town renowned for its free and indomitable spirit. As some popularity among the local inhabitants. He also mixed with the his competitors the modern methods of tailoring which earned him istically unbourgeois, he took time out, while in Nasiriyyah, to teach But he was an unusual kind of a tailor for, in a fashion so characterfar as one could tell, he earned his living by working as a tailor known to have made frequent visits to the peasant countryside in the poorer classes and showed great interest in their conditions and was Muntafik region. He selected his companions in Nasiriyyah and Basrah Vasili came to Iraq by way of Persia in 1922 or thereabouts. He > from among the members of Al-Hizb Al-Watani (The Nationalist struggle against British influence. Party), a party that had always been in the vanguard of the Iraqi close terms with Kirchin and others of the Soviet Trade Agency in 1932 that the police discovered that Vasili was a Communist preacher. Propaganda at the University of Baku by the name of Filimonov who ary 7 of that year reported him as being in communication through an Basrah's C.I.D. Confidential Weekly Diary for the week ending Januwas then living in Kermanshah. Subsequently, he was found to be on Assyrian motor car driver named Ya'kub with a Professor of Oriental It was, as far as could be ascertained from the records, only in circle, a teacher of Physics at Basrah's Secondary School in 1927, and on January 22, 1934, by 'Abd-ul-Hamid Al-Khatib, a member of that the time of his second sojourn in that seaport-and which chose Nadi of the first Communist circle of Basrah which appeared in 1927-at an agent provocateur in 1934. this connection it would help to cite the statement given to the police Ash-Shabibah - the Youth Club - as the center of its activities. In It is not certain whether Vasili was instrumental in the formation ed it, organized it, and enrolled its candidates. Our affairs spread party and taught its members the Communistic teachings . . . I found-Basrah that knew anything about Communism... I created such a Prior to the year 1927-said Al-Khatib-there was no party in were Zakariyyah Elias Duka,70 Yusuf Salman,71 Daud Salman,72 Ghali even to Nasiriyya and Samawah . . . The most active of my associates of all these persons and their applications for admission to the Com-Az-Zuwayyid,73 and 'Abd-ul-Kader As-Sayyab74... The photographs munist Party are in the Soviet Consulate at Ahwaz. I left them there

70 A clerk in the Port Administration.

72 A brother of Yusuf and an electrician.

Unemployed.

64

is cited in Abstract of Intelligence, Vol. XV, No. 21, May 27, 1933, Paragraph 466. 69 There is no mention in Vasili's dossier of his contact with Kirchin but this

Authority, and from Nasiriyyah. 71 A supporter of the Nationalist Party, a clerk at the Basrah Electrical Supply

⁷³ A member of the Nationalist Party and an agent of the Sa'duns, once the ruling family of the Muntafik tribal confederation.

⁷⁵ I found a copy of this statement in Major Wilkins' File No 488 on Zakariyyah Elias Duka. The Iraqi Police File No 7687 on 'Abd-ul-Hamid Al-Khatib did not contain the original of Communist fraternities - is Al-Khatib's intimate friendship in the of a certain Dr. Tomaniantz who ostensibly practised medicine since of Basrah on the Persian side of Shatt-Al-'Arab and then the "seat" society cannot be doubted. But whether the initiative was Pyotr Vasili's was of Persian origin and holder of passports from both Iraq and in Muhammarah and a supporter of Bolshevism.77 Al-Khatib himself nineteen-twenties with Muhammad Ghuloom, a Persian school teacher though this may be no more than an evidence of the interconnection What points to the possibility of influence from Muhammarah-altime in close connection with Palutkin, Soviet Consul at Ahwaz.70 in Kharkov prior to its fall to Denikin's White Army and was at this Service, the "President of the Extraordinary Commission of the Soviet" his arrival there in 1921 but had been, according to the British Special communism by revolutionaries from Muhammarah, a city to the south is not now ascertainable. Al-Khatib might have been brought over to without some reserve. That he himself did not originate the Basrah One would be justified in declining to accept Al-Khatib's version of the Basrah society formed the core of the Nasiriyyah Communist February of 1949. alive the few seeds that had been sown. Indeed the place that Pyotr circle which came into being around 1928 and provided in the years but worked or had dealings in Basrah and soon after the organization duced to communism by Pyotr Vasili. All three were from Nasiriyyah viz., Yusuf Salman, Daud Salman, and Ghali Az-Zuwayyid, were intro-1943 till his death on the gallows with two of his comrades in builder of the Iraqi Communist Party and its Secretary General from hands that Yusuf Salman had his first lessons in communism, for history is written - will rest primarily on the fact that it was at his Vasili will occupy in the history of Iraqi communism - when that to come the perseverance that is so rare in Iraq and that was to keep persons named by Al-Khatib in his statement of January 22, 1934, Yusuf Salman is none other than the now legendary "Fahd," the real On the other hand, it is beyond dispute that at least three of the Committee: Jam'iyyat Al-Ahrar or Al-Hizb Al-Hurr Al-Ladini.78 by the Nasiriyyah and Basrah circles in coordination with the Beirut It only remains to discuss briefly the first open association formed > hood irrespective of their religion." A subsequent memorandum by indicated that the new association was "calling the people to brother-Baghdad's C.I.D. asserted that its advocates also under the sponsorship of Nadi Ash-Shabibah.80 Early police reports Syrian non-denominational organization"79 appeared in January 1929 The Basrah branch of what to the authorities was then simply "a even for the government. believe in no religion and any sin before them has no value. Their talk and principles are such that in the long run they might not care to give occasion to the following remark by Basrah's Inspector of But by August 1 it had progressed so far in disseminating its ideas as mostly minor government officials of the Muslim and Christian faith.81 At first the society had little echo and appears to have attracted

See Umm Al-Kura, p. 23. Source: Major Wilkins' File No 2652 on Vasili.

Nowadays in every place of gathering the question of Al-Ladini is being discussed and the result is sometimes hot words between the Communist experiment in open existence. It was only a few years later it. And thus ended the first-and for the next two decades the onlyout to Baghdad and other places, the government hastened to suppress brought out was the question of religion. that in the Iraq of 1929 the last question that should have been that the Communists realized that they had begun the wrong way and When it became apparent that the society was beginning to branch liest statement of Communist intentions may appropriately be quoted has been preserved. The principal passages of what in fact is the earentirely on the testimony of the police, for the text of its programme Fortunately our view of Jam'iyyat Al-Ahrar does not have to rest

The Principles of Jam'iyyat Al-Ahrar

Liberty, Fraternity, and Equality You were born free. Live free!

80 See above, p. 66.

⁷⁹ Source: Iraqi Police File on "Al-Hizb Al-Hurr Al-Ladini."

Salman, Ghali Az-Zuwayyid, 'Abd-ul-Hamid Al-Khatib, and 'Abd-ul-Kader As-Higher Teachers' College; Hanna Balaya and Yusuf Daud, clerks at the Basrah Port; George Stephan, a contractor; and Andrea Isa, a postal official. The last four persons as well as Yusuf and Daud Salman were Christians. All the rest were Railways; Ghuloom Bastaki, a librarian; Mahdi Wasfi, a student at Baghdad's Sayyab were 'Abd-ul-Zahra, a wireless operator; 'Abd Muhammad, a clerk at the Source: Major Wilkins' File No 937 on Dr. Tomaniantz.

 Source: Iraqi Police File No 7687 on 'Abd-ul-Hamid Al-Khatib

⁷⁸ See also above, pp. 49 and 60.

The Association seeks:

- 1) to liberate the mind, the soul, and the body, and to propagate by every legal means the freedom of thought, speech, and action;
- 2) a) to work unsparingly by all lawful methods for the separation of religion from all temporal affairs, i.e., from "politics," "education," "family life," etc....
- b) to protest strongly... against any religious action injurious to the unity of the people;
- 3) to spread religious tolerance . . . in all the Arab countries . .
- 4) to realize its aims through legislative changes ... and by participation in parliamentary elections ...
- 5) to expose how far the clerics have deviated in their behavior from the original essence of religion, considering that the religions have been the principal cause of discord and that the sublime aim of the association is to unite the scattered forces of the people...
- 7) to liberate the Arab woman from all fetters...
- 9) ... to regard all Arab countries as one country.

in Nasiriyyah on the night of December 13, 1932 - held up the watchsignificance in this regard that the first placards to appear in Iraq with tries, while Article 4 required all adherents to swear their allegiance the extension of the activities of the association to all the Arab couniyyat Al-Ahrar. Articles 3 and 9 of these Rules, for example, envisaged and may have been nourished by elements that were already predisthat the early Communists of that country drew upon existing feelings gramme recalls the anti-clerical tendencies that appeared in Lebanon Sixth Congress of the Comintern. This may explain its moderate tone, in Beirut in 1928 apparently sometime before the convening of the word: "Long Live the Union of Workers' and Peasants' Republics of the emblem of the hammer and the sickle - and that were posted up by "the honor of Arabism and the sacred homeland." It is not without its Pan-Arab orientation. This is also reflected in the Rules of Jam'posed in their direction. One last striking feature of the Programme is in the months after the 1908 Young Turk Revolution,82 which suggests historical development. It is also worth mentioning that the Proits emphasis on legal and constitutional methods, and its predilections that the Arab countries were then ripe for "the bourgeois phase" of for the ideals of the French Revolution. Obviously the assessment was It must be stated that the original of this document was prepared the Arab Countries!"⁸³ In fact my investigations have led me to conclude not only that Arab communism began as a Pan-Arab movement but that the Communist parties were the first organizations in the Arab countries to include the Arabs of Egypt and of North Africa within the purview of the Arab national idea. This is a conclusion that can here only be stated as its development will take us far afield.⁸⁴

At this point we must bring to an end these preliminary observations on the beginnings of communism in the Arab East and only hope that we have succeeded in shedding some light on a subject that has been and largely remains shrouded in obscurity.

⁸³ The text of this placard has been preserved. Abstract of Intelligence of 1932

Paragraph 1058 of December 14, 1932, has reference.

84 I well remember my surprise when I discovered in the records that it was under Communist auspices that the first All-Arab Congress—oddly enough called "Mu'tamar-uj-Jami'at-il-'Arabiyyah," i. e. "the Arab League Congress"—which was intended to bring together nationalist delegates from all the Arab countries from Morocco to Iraq, met in Frankfurt, Germany in July 1929. The Congress was not much of a success.

⁸² See above, p. 48.

Summary of the Discussion

The chairman of the session, Professor Farhat Ziadeh, opened the discussion period by inviting questions. The first question was addressed to Colonel G. E. Wheeler and concerned the susceptibility of the new Turkish regime to Soviet pressure.

Colonel Wheeler explained that he had not wanted to give the impression in this report that Turkey was now more susceptible to Soviet pressure. What he had meant was that with the change in the regime in Turkey the Russians may consider it appropriate to bring up new and possibly highly embarrassing subjects to the attention of the new Turkish government. The Turks turned down Soviet demands in 1945 but now that a new situation exists in Turkey the Soviets may want to try again. This does not mean, of course, that the new Turkish government is veering towards the left.

The next question queried the "dominance" of Arabs in the Communist Party of Israel. Mr. John Batatu replied that the Arabs were an underprivileged community in that country. This coupled with the special circumstances arising out of the tragedy of the Palestinian people could account for the relatively large percentage of Arabs in the Party.

Mr. Batatu also replied to the next question which dealt with the spread of communism among workers in the oil companies. On the basis of an analysis he made of the composition of the Iraqi Communist Party in the years 1946—49, he felt that although the workers who were members of the Party were not heavily concentrated in any one place but were thinly dispersed among the different factories and workshops of the major Iraqi towns, the largest concentration of them at that time was in the Kirkuk oil center. He added that the oil workers were relatively better paid than workers in other industries but this did not necessarily imply that Communist ideas were bound to have less attraction for them. In fact the majority of the laboring Communist membership was recruited from the skilled and better paid workers rather than from the unskilled and poorly remunerated stratum.

The discussion then turned to the question of Soviet policy regarding oil. According to Colonel Wheeler, it is doubtful that the Soviets have a clear-cut oil policy on Middle East oil. He believed the Soviets do not want to cheapen its value by cutting prices on their own oil. This would be too drastic a measure to conform with present Soviet policies. The Soviet Union wants, for the present, a period of quiet to permit the country to go ahead with its own plans. The Soviet Union would, therefore, approach the whole question of oil with caution. It is, of course, difficult to prognosticate but at least there is nothing to be found in the Soviet press and publications about oil except the desire to denigrate the West's connection with the Middle East oil industry. The Soviets are hammering at the latter as hard as they can and find the oil consortium in Iran most offensive.

other countries in the world, diplomatic relations with the Soviet experimented with communism and feel that they should become more a doctrine. Communism may have an appeal to those Arabs who want acting as a state according to its national interests and communism as Mr. Saadat Hasan was called upon to answer the question regarding the differences between Arab communism and Soviet policy in Party was made legal recently is Iraq. However, the Iraqi Communist life, and a system. The only Arab country in which the Communist Soviet Union as a power and communism as an ideology, a way of accepted communism as an ideology. They differentiate between the Highly educated Arabs and Arab nationalists have, by and large, not active themselves. The appeal of communism, however, is limited. They look upon the Soviet Union and China as having successfully people are not satisfied with an evolutionary process of development. quick action to achieve better living conditions in the Arab world. Such Communist ideology. There is a distinction between the Soviet Union Union. This, however, does not mean that the Arabs are importing the Middle East. Arab countries, stated Mr. Hasan, maintain, as do Party is weak and its membership split.

Mr. Batatu, who supplemented Mr. Hasan's remarks, doubted whether it would be correct to assume that communism appealed only to the "pseudo-intellectuals" of the Arab countries. Whatever one's opinion of the Arab intellectual class as a whole may be, it should be granted that some of the Communists belonged to the most advanced sections of the Arab intelligentsia.

At 5:02 P. M. the chairman closed the discussion.

Notes on Participants

The morning session was chaired by Tibor Halaši-Kun, associate professor at Columbia University.

The first speaker was RICHARD N. FRYE, Aga Khan Professor of Iranian at Harvard University.

The second speaker, RICHARD PIPES, is associate professor of history at Harvard University.

The last speaker at the morning session was GARIP SULTAN, member of the Institute for the Study of the USSR.

The afternoon session was chaired by FARHAT ZIADEH, associate professor at Princeton University.

The first speaker was Col. G. E. Wheeler, Director of the Central Asian Research Centre in London, England.

The second speaker, SAADAT HASAN, is chief of Press and Public Liaison at the Arab States Delegation in New York.

The last speaker, John Batatu, received his doctorate in Russian and Arab area studies from Harvard University where he is presently research associate.